out that this witness's name did not appear in any of the lists of witnesses but that he was summoned only a few days before the defendants let in their evidence, and was not served with summons until the day before he was examined. The explanation as to why his name did not appear in any of the previous lists of witnesses is that it did not transpire that he was present at the time of Gopalakrishnayya's death or knew anything about the alleged authority to adopt, until the defendants' 14th witness Amba Narasayya happened to be questioned by the Pleader for the defence when he disclosed this man's name. We find it impossible to believe that if this witness was actually present at the death-bed of Gopalakrishnayya, his name would not have been known to everybody else present there and that the defendants would not have known from the very beginning that this man knew about the authority to adopt. The other men who were present at Gopalakrishnayya's bedside were ordinary villagers and if the defendants' 13th witness was also there and heard the deceased give authority to his wife to adopt a child on his death, it is fairly certain he would have been one of the first to be summoned to give evidence in the case. As regards the other witnesses the Subordinate Judge has dealt with their evidence in paragraph 128 of his judgment and we are unable to say that his estimate of their evidence is incorrect. Further the circumstances of the case strongly support the conclusion of the trial Judge. The authority is stated to have been given in 1865, but it is not mentioned in any sort of document or writing until the very date of adoption, that is till 1911. If any such authority had been received by Ammama, it can be assumed with certainty that there would have been more than one occasion to mention ths fact during all these years. Ammama was seriously ill in 1898 and the Subordinate Judge is right in pointing out that if she had any authority to adopt, she would have made some attempt to carry out her husband's wishes at that time. The absence of all reference in Exhibit FF to any such authority also negatives the supposition that the authority was actually given. It is pointed out by the learned Subordinate Judge that the story of the defence is that from the very birth of the 1st defendant Ammama wanted to adopt him. If there was the least truth in the suggestion we cannot understand why, if she had received authority from her husband, she would have refrained from making the adoption till the very last day of her death. We, therefore, agree with the Subordinate Judge that the adoption of the 1st defendant is not valid.

The adoption of the 93rd defendant by Manikyam, the widow of Koniah, is said to have taken place on the 29th October 1911, that is to say, previous to Exhibit S, the deed of surrender executed by Rangamma on the 23rd November 1911. Manikyam at that date was 30 years of age and it is not disputed that though the authority to adopt had been given to her by her deceased husband 14 years ago, she made no attempt to adopt all this time, and there can be little doubt upon the evidence that if she did make the adoption as alleged, it must have been brought about more or less hurriedly and with the object of defeating the reversioners of Gopalakrishnayya who, it is said, were anxious to get hold of the estate by means of a surrender from Gopalakrishnayya's mother, Rangamma. Manikyam had also inherited from her husband somewhat valuable properties of the value of Rs. 15,000 and we have no hesitation in saying that if she was at all anxious to adopt in accordance with the authority given by her husband, she would have made the adoption long before 1911. The suggestion made on behalf of the appellant is that it was at the time that Ammama was taken ill that the idea occurred to her advisers, especially the 1st defendant who was the gomasta of both Ammama and Manikyam, to have an adoption made by Manikyam in order to make sure that the property of Gopalakrishnayya did not go to the reversioners. There can be no doubt that the relations both of Ammama and Manikyam on the one hand and of the reversioners on the other were anxious to secure to themselves the property which was in the possession of Ammama and which on Ammama's death would devolve on Rangamma, the mother of Gopalakrishnayya.

The learned Subordinate Judge, having considered the evidence on both sides, has come to the conclusion that the story of the adoption of 93rd defendant is not true. He has found himself unable to accept the testimony of the witnesses of the defendants who speak to the adoption taking place on the 29th October 1911, and is inclined to accept the evidence of the witnesses of the plaintiff residing in the village of Guraza where the adoption is said to have taken place. They all state that they never heard of any such adoption and that if there had been one, they would have known of it. Most of the witnesses in support of the adoption are relations of Manikyam or Ammama, but that in itself would not, in a case of this nature, throw discredit on their testimony if we were in a position to say on a view of the undoubted facts and probabilities of the case that the story set up is true. The 93rd defendant at the time of the alleged adoption was 7 or 8 years old; he belonged to a very poor family in Kavutharam. He used to go to a school at Kavutharam and the case is that he was brought to Guraza on the 29th October, which happened to be a Sunday, and after the adoption was hastily performed on the same day, he went back with his parents to his village. From the school register it appears that he attended school as usual on the 30th. It is observed by the learned Judge that it is hardly likely that if the boy had been adopted, the adoptive mother would have allowed him to return to Kavutharam on the same day. The Subordinate Judge also comments on the fact that though his original name was said to have been changed and under the law, being affiliated to the family of his adoptive father, he would henceforth be known as the son of his adoptive father, no alteration was made either in his name or in that of his father in the school register. As regards the actual ceremony, the Subordinate Judge is impressed by the fact that no sufficient publicity was given to the adoption and the adoption was not celebrated as one would expect it to be, having regard to the fact that Manikyam was in fairly well-to-do circumstances. The absence of any music at the time of the ceremony, as specially pointed out, was a circumstance against the truth of the story of the defence. There is one very important circumstance noted by the Subordinate Judge which militates against the theory of adoption, that is, the fact that the boy did not perform the shradh ceremony of the adoptive father which took place about 20 days from the date of the alleged adoption. Then the evidence is that he performed the two succeeding ceremonies at the village of Kavutharam while Manikyam herself was living at Guraza. It is also to be noted that the boy did not live with Manikyam at all for a long time after the alleged adoption.

There are also other very significant circumstances which support the decision of the Subordinate Judge. On the 24th November 1911, when the deed of surrender was presented for registration, it appears that a representation was made to the Sub-Registrar that, as a matter of fact, Manikyam had adopted a son and, therefore, Rangamma was not entitled to make a valid surrender. Exhibit LLLL is one of those petitions and it was sent by post and received by the Sub-Registrar on the 24th. Exhibit LLLL (1), the other petition, was presented to the Sub Registrar personally by the brother of the 81st defendant. It is curious that in none of these petitions, the name of the adopted son is mentioned, and we do not think that any proper explanation has been given for this omission. The Sub Registrar who was examined in the case says that the 81st defendant himself was present at the time of registration of Exhibit S and when asked for the name of the adopted son, he replied that the boy would come before the public in the course of a short time. We are asked to say that the evidence of the Sub-Registrar on the point is false. The Subordinate Judge, who saw the witness, did not find sufficient reason for disbelieving him; but apart from that, when we remember that there was so much anxiety displayed by the appellant's party to object to the registration of the deed of surrender and to set up an adoption, it is difficult to see why the name of the adopted son, if the adoption had actually taken place, should not have been put forward.

Then we find that the Will alleged to have been executed by Manikyam, Exhibit

XXX, and the deed of sale purporting to have been executed by her, Exhibit UUUU, both bear the date of 29th October 1911, the date of the alleged adoption. The adoption is mentioned in Exhibit XXX, and there can be very little doubt that the main purpose for which Exhibit XXX was executed, whenever it might have been executed, was to supply evidence of this adoption. The Subordinate Judge has found that both these documents have been antedated, and it seems to us that there is force in the reasons given in support of this conclusion. If, as a matter of fact, the Will was executed on the 29th October, it is not at all clear why, having regard to the anxiety which Manikyam and her advisers had to defeat the contemplated surrender on the part of Rangamma, no steps should have been taken at once to register this document. Then in Exhibit LLLL it is mentioned that certain documents "executed between the said Manikyam and the adopted son were about to be registered," and this could not possibly refer to the Will or to the deed of sale, Exhibit UUUU, and it is not explained why if the Will had been in existence it was not mentioned in Exhibit LLLL. One would have thought that if Exhibit XXX was in existence at that time, it would have been presented before the Sub-Registrar in support of the story of the alleged adoption. The truth seems to be, as suggested by the trial Judge, that Manikyam had no idea of adopting, but when her own relations and advisers found that the reversioners were going to obtain a surrender from Rangamma, they thought it necessary to give out that Manikyam had actually made an adoption. It may be assumed that Manikyam could not be persuaded to yield to the wishes of her advisers and make an adoption, but apparently it was not found easy to secure within the short time at their disposal a suitable boy whose parents or guardians would agree to such terms as would suit the purposes of Manikyam's relations and advisers. For instance, the brother of Manikyam is claiming a valuable portion of the properties belonging to the estate of her husband, under a conveyance said to have been executed on the date of the alleged adoption. In these circumstances we must confirm the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the alleged adoption of the 93rd defendant has not been proved.

The surrender of Rangamma is attacked mainly on the ground that it is not a bona fide transaction, inasmuch as she received Rs. 6,000 as consideration for making the surrender in favour of defendants Nos. 84 and 85 who were the nearest reversioners. The property is of the value of about 1½ lakhs yielding an annual income of something like Rs. 10 000 At the time of the surrender, Rangamma was about 80 years old. It also appears that defendants Nos 84 and 85 came to an arrangement with all the remoter reversioners as regards this property, and it may reasonably be that one of these persons will succeed on her death. The plaintiff, who seeks to recover his share under an arrangement of purchase from the surrenderees, is one of the remote reversioners. The question of law is undoubtedly one of difficulty, but so far as this Court is concerned, we must take it as settled by recent decisions reported as Keretti Brahmanaikudu v. Kereti Mahalakshmi (1) and Challa Subbiah Sastri v. Palury Pattabhiramayya (2). In the previous case it was arranged at the time of the surrender that part of the property would be reconveyed to the brother of the widow, and there was also a stipulation that she was to receive Rs. 400 though the amount apparently was not actually paid. Even in the face of these facts it was ruled, following the earlier case of Challa Subbiah Sastri v. Palury Pattabhiramayya (2), that the surrender was a valid one. We think that the present case is covered by those decisions. Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar tried to distinguish the present case from that in Challa Subbiah Sastri v. Palury Pattabhiramayya (2), on the ground that there is an observation by Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair that if part of the property be reconveyed to the widow in pursuance of an understanding at the time of the surrender, that might make a difference. But this observation is only by way of obiter, the main principle of the decision being that the fact that the consideration for the surrender was a reconveyance of a portion of the property, though to a third person, does not ipso facto invalidate the surrender. In this the consideration for the surrender, which would not amount to more than Rs. 6,000 at the most, was but a very small fraction of the entire property.

(1) 17 Ind. Cas. 487; (1913) M. W. N. 433; 24 M. L. J. 543; 13 M. L. T. 468.

It is also argued that inasmuch as a house site worth about Rs. 600 is not included in the deed of surrender, the surrender cannot be said to be the entire estate as the law requires and is, therefore, bad. We do not think that there is any force in this contention. It is a very insignificant fraction that is not included in the surrender, very likely through inadvertence, and this cannot be held to affect the substance of the transaction. It was further sought to be argued by Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar that the so-called surrender was in fact an alienation of the properties by the widow to a number of persons, some at least among them being strangers not concerned in the reversion. He suggested that the surrender was a mere cloak in order to support alienations in favour of strangers. But this case was never sought to be made in the lower Court. No doubt in paragraph 6 of the 1st defendant's written statement there is a vague averment of conspiracy, but it cannot be said to have been intended to put forward a case that what purported to be a surrender in favour of the nearest reversioners, viz., defendants Nos. 84 and 85, was really meant by Rangamma to be a cloak for supporting alienations in favour of strangers. No such issue was raised and the learned Subordinate Judge, who dealt with every matter raised during the trial at great length, has not alluded to any such question in his judgment. The surrender then was of practically the whole estate without reserving any portion of it to the widow, though a small sum of money was paid to the widow. In these circumstances the validity of the surrender is concluded so far as this Court is concerned by the decisions in Keretti Brahmanaikudu v. Kareti Mahalakshmi (1) and Challa Subbiah Sastri v. Palury Pattabhiramayya (2).

Then another point was raised by Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar that so far as the gift to the National College of 1/15th share of the property is concerned, it was not shown to have been accepted by the trustee of the College, as neither he nor the Secretary produced the deed at the time of the trial. The gift was not of an onerous nature and there is no reason for saying that it has not been accepted by the trustee. As a matter of fact both in the lower Court and before us in the arguments on behalf of the 1st defendant it was persistently and earnestly urged that it was the trustee and other persons interested in the National College that brought about the surrender. We do not think that there is any substance in this objection.

The next point urged before us is that this suit is not framed as a suit for partition and the Subordinate Judge was not right in declaring the shares of the different parties and in giving a decree for partition. As we read the plaint, it is a suit for partition and it has been so treated by the lower Court. The whole case has been tried on that basis.

The first point taken in the appeal on behalf of the 3rd defendant is that he should not have been made liable for mesne profits of item No. 9 in the schedule. It is suggested that he was in possession of that item on behalf of his minor natural son, the 1st defendant. It has been pointed out that the 1st defendant is not entitled to the property, and as the 3rd defendant himself was in actual possession of the property, we think he has rightly been made liable for mesne profits. As regards costs, it is suggested that some issues were decided in favour of the 1st defendant and the 3rd defendant and, therefore, the Sub Judge was not right in awarding the whole costs against them. But they failed on the substantial questions raised in the trial and we do not think that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in his order as to costs.

This disposes of the appeal by the 1st and 3rd defendants. Appeal No. 373 of 1915 is dismissed with costs.

APPEALS NOS. 420 AND 421 OF 1915.

These appeals must be dismissed with costs, on our finding that the adoption of the 93rd defendant did not, in fact, take place.

APPEAL NO. 384 OF 1915.

This appeal relates to certain properties which belonged to the estate of Konayya and were inherited by his widow Manikyam. She sold these properties to her own brothers by Exhibit UUUU for Rs. 5,000, which has been found and rightly so found to be a wholly inadequate consideration, assuming that it was paid. Mr. Narayanamurthi wishes to support the sale on the strength of Exhibit II, a Will executed by Konayya. His contention is that under this Will Manikyam became sole owner of the property inasmuch as no child was born to her. But it has been found in fact that there was no miscarriage and that a female child was born to Konayya after his death and died shortly after its birth. The last clause in the Will to which reference is made says, "if no such (child) should be born, the adopted son which my wife according to her pleasure may take, or my wife Manikyam should enjoy the * * * * property." The gift to Manikyam is contingent on the child she was carrying not being born alive; this contingency did not happen as the child was in fact born alive and, therefore, the contemplated gift did not take effect in favour of Manikyam. This was the only question raised before us in the appeal which was argued only on behalf of defendants Nos. 3 and 4.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

APPEAL NO. 422 OF 1915.

This appeal raises the question of the validity of the lease of item No. 1 in the schedule granted by Ammama on the 4th December 1893 for 20 years to her father for a rent of Rs. 1,500 a year. The lease will expire in 2 years' time and the question argued before us is whether such a lease is competent for the widow to grant. The Subordinate Judge has found that in the circumstances it could not be said to be an improvident lease and has upheld it. It appears that the tenants, who were in possession of the lands, were creating difficulties and it was probable that without considerable litigation no rent would have been realised from them. We find that as a matter of fact Ammama's father had to bring a number of suits in order to eject the tenants who were denying his title and to recover the lands. It is stated that rent reserved in the original lease granted to Gopalakrishnayya was Rs. 1,900. But having regard to the difficulty of realising the rent, the Subordinate Judge is right in saying that the reduction of rent was justified. No doubt the lease was executed by Ammama in favour of her father, but it is difficult to say that it was done with a view to favour him as Ammama in fact prosecuted her father in a Criminal Court on some charges in connection with the accounts of her property. We are not, therefore, prepared to differ from the conclusion of the learned Subordinate Judge that the lease, under the circumstances, was a fair and bona fide transaction. That being so, it is undoubtedly valid in law. Mr. Ramadoss on behalf of the appellant also claims interest on the rents decreed to him. But having regard to the frame of the suit and the fact that the rents decreed were mostly for periods subsequent to the institution of the suit, we do not think we would be justified in giving him interest.

Item No. 2 in the schedule was bought by Ammama's father at a Court auction. The property was under mortgage to Ammama's husband Gopalakrishnayya and in order to enforce it, a mortgage suit was brought and in pursuance of the decree in that suit it was brought to sale. It was sold for Rs 600 and odd, although the decretal amount was about Rs. 2,000. Ammama's father was apparently a fairly well to do man and had sufficient means to buy this property. It is found that after him his son, the 2nd defendant, has been in possession, paying kist or Government revenue. It also appears that in a suit instituted by Ranganna against Ammama for maintenance, Ammama disclaimed all interest in this property; and in the proceeding before the arbitrators in the dispute between Ammama and her father, she did not claim the property as her own. These facts go to show that the property really was bought by Ammama's father bona fide and not as benamidar for Ammama. Much reliance is placed on an entry in the account-books of the Pleader who acted in the proceedings in the mortgage suit. These accounts show that a ledger was opened in Ammama's father's name and this property was purchased on his behalf. There is, however, a transfer of a small sum of Rs. 2 12 0 to Ammama's ledger, she being debited with this amount as it was incurred in respect of cost for taking delivery of the property. We do not think that this is sufficient to outweigh the other evidence which goes to show that the property was bought by Ammama's father on his own account. The burden lay upon the plaintiff to prove that the transaction was of a benami character, but far from that burden being discharged the evidence shows that the purchase was not benami.

Item No. 10 in the schedule, which consists of 25 cents of land, appears to have been made a gift of by Ammama to her Purohit, the 73rd defendant, on the occasion of the Kistna Pushkaram. It is alleged that there is no registered instrument to evidence the gift and, therefore, it must be disallowed. No such plea, however, was taken and the question was not raised before the lower Court. We cannot, therefore, allow it to be raised now. This objection as regards item No. 10 is, therefore, disallowed.

Appeal No. 422 of 1915 fails and is dismissed with costs. So also the memorandum of objections in Appeal No. 373 of 1915 argued by Mr. Ramadoss.

The memorandum of objections in Appeal Nos. 422 of 1915 filed on behalf of defendants Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9 and 21 relates to items Nos. 11, 15, 12, 16, in the schedule. As regards item No. 11, the Subordinate Judge has awarded mesne profits at the rate of Rs. 20 for all the shares and as regards item No. 15 he has awarded at the rate of 15 tooms an acre and at Rs. 50 a patti. It is contended that, as a matter of fact, these items are not in the possession of the 7th defendant. No doubt in his evidence he denies that he is in possession. But it is expressly alleged in the plaint that these items are in the possession of the 7th defendant and in his written statement there is no clear or positive denial of the allegation in the plaint. As regards item No. 12, the Subordinate Judge has given mesne profits at Rs 50 per patti and we are not in a position to say why he ought to have awarded, as is now contended, Rs. 44 and not Rs. 50. As regards item No. 16, the Subordinate Judge has awarded Rs. 480-6-0 while, as a matter of fact, the amount claimed is Rs. 413. The decree will, therefore, be modified by reducing the amount to Rs. 413, otherwise the memorandum of objections fails and is dismissed with costs.

The memorandum of objections in Appeal No. 373 of 19 5.

As regards the memorandum of objections of the 76th defendant (13th respondent) the mesne profits awarded will be reduced to what is claimed against him in the plaint.

The 2nd defendant's (2nd respondent's) memorandum of objections:—The Subordinate Judge has found that the 14 cents, which is part of item No. 2, belongs to Ammama and we do not see special reason for interfering with that finding. Nor is there any ground for interfering with the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge as regards the liability of the 2nd defendant for the mesne profits of item No. 9. The technical objection, however, to the form of the decree with reference to item No. (1) is well founded, inasmuch as this item of property is under a lease and will not expire till sometime in 1918. The Subordinate Judge was not, therefore, right in so framing the decree as to give the plaintiff a present right to partition of this property. We think that there ought to be a paragraph in the decree after paragraph 2 to this effect that the right of the plaintiff to item No (1) of schedule be declared subject to the leasehold interest of the 2nd defendant under Exhibit HHH. As a consequence of that in the third paragraph of the decree, after the words "other than items" add "1 and 2." The paragraphs will be re-numbered. Subject to the above modifications of the decree the memorandum of objections is dismissed with costs.

The 18th respondent's memorandum of objections:—This relates to a part of item No. 20 amounting to about 7 acres and odd. This property was sold in auction in execution of the decree obtained by Rangamma against Ammama. The Subordinate Judge has found that the purchase by the 1st respondent, who was the gomasta of Ammama, was made on behalf of Ammama herself. There is considerable evidence in support of this finding which is also in accordance with the probabilities of the case. The memorandum of objections is dismissed with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

CIVIL REVISION No. 103 OF 1918.

August 6, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Stuart and Mr. Justice Walsh.

Syed SALAMAT ALI AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 167—Order of

GAJ KUMAR CHANDER v. SALAMAT ALI.

Assistant Collector – Revision, whether lies—High Court, power of interference of.

The High Court has no power to entertain an application for revision against an order passed in appeal against the decision of an Assistant Collector in a matter covered by the provisions of section 167 of the Agra Tenancy Act.

Civil revision against the order of the District Judge, Allahabad, dated the 8th February 1918.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. G. L. Agarwala, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—The decision of this revision has been referred to a Bench of two Judges in view of the difference of opinion between the Judges who decided Parbhu Narain Singh v. Harbans Lal (1). The point is this. Does a revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, lie against the order of a District Judge in an appeal against the decision of an Assistant Collector in a matter under the provisions of section 167, Local Act II of 1901? We have heard the arguments. The arguments to the effect that no such revision lies can briefly be stated as follows: Under the provisions of section 167, Local Act II of 1901, all suits and applications of the nature specified in the 4th Schedule shall be heard and determined by the Revenue Courts and, except in the way of appeal, as hereinafter provided, no Courts other than Courts of Revenue shall take cognizance of any dispute or matter in respect of which any such suit or application might be brought or made. The authority of Courts for dealing with the matters provided for by that Act is to be found in the provisions of the Act itself. Revenue Courts only have authority to deal with original matters. Revenue Courts in some instances and Civil Courts in other instances have authority to deal with matters in appeal. The Act confers powers in revision under the provisions of section 185 on the Board of Revenue alone. What authority then, we are asked, has the High Court "except in the way of appeal as hereinafter provided." According to this argument the High Court has necessarily no revisional authority. The arguments on the other side are to the effect that section 115, Civil Procedure Code, confers upon the High Court revisional jurisdiction over all Civil Courts subordinate to itself. As a District Judge's Court is subordinate to the High Court, it follows according to this argument that the High Court must have powers to revise any orders passed by a District Judge. Great stress is laid in this connection upon the provisions of section 193, Local Act II of 1901, and we have been asked to note that the provisions of old section 622, Civil Procedure Code, are not excluded under the provisions of section 193. After considering the point we are of opinion that the argument against the existence of revisional powers of the High Court in these matters must prevail; the fact that there is no exclusion of section 622 in section 193 does not affect the question, for the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure apply to the procedure in suits and other proceedings under the Rent Act so far as they are not inconsistent therewith. Thus the only power that the High Court has to dispose of matters covered by Local Act II of 1901 is given by the Act itself, and the power of revision is not a power which is so given to it. In other words we accept the view of Mr. Justice Piggott in Parbhu Narain Singh v. Harbans Lal (1): "I am, as at present advised, of opinion that it would be doing violence to the words of the last clause of section 167 of the Tenancy Act for this Court to entertain the present application at all." The same view was taken by Tudball, J., in Mohammad Ehtisham Ali v. Lalji Singh (2). We, therefore, find that the High Court has no power to entertain an application for revision against an order passed in appeal by a District Judge against the decision of an Assistant Collector. We accept the preliminary objection and dismiss this revision with costs.

KAMAKSHI AMMAL v. SUBBARAYA CHETTY.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 1065 OF 1918.

March 6, 1919.

KAMAKSHI AMMAL—PLAINTIFF No. 1—PETITIONER

SUBBARAYA CHETTY AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANT AND PLAINTIFF No. 2—RESPONDENTS.

Stamp Act (II of 1899), s. 37—Certificate by Collector under s. 37, grant of legality of—Endorsement on pro-note that penalty has been levied, effect of—Pro-note, invalid, suit on—Trial without objection by parties—Original cause of action, suit on—Amendment of plaint—Oral application, whether sufficient—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 153, O. VI, r. 17.

An endorsement on a pro-note by a Sub-Collector that penalty has been levied, is not a certificate within the meaning of section 37 of the Stamp Act that the pro-note is duly stamped. [p. 758, col. 2.]

Reference under section 57 of Act II of 1899, 23 A. 213 A. W. N. (1901) 54 and Venkatraman Ganap Hegde v. Shankarnarayan Sitaram Bhat, 42 Ind. Cas. 947: 19 Bom. L. R. 862, considered.

Where a suit is based on a pro-note which is invalid under the Stamp Act but which both parties think is valid, the Court should allow the plaintiff to amend his plaint and fall back on his original cause of action. [p. 759, col. 1.]

A written application is not necessary to move the Court for an order allowing an amendment of the pleadings. An oral application is sufficient. [p. 758, col. 2.]

Petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the District Court, Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 388 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Conjeevaram, in Original Suit No. 497 of 1916.

Mr. T. Narasimha Iyengar, for the Petitioner.—The Sub Collector having granted a certificate, the same is binding on the Civil Courts. The mention of a wrong section is immaterial. In any event the defendant did not object to the maintainability of the suit. The parties went to trial on the assumption that the pro-note was valid. The lower Court should have allowed the plaintiff to fall back on the original cause of action. The District Judge erred in holding that the application for amendment should be in writing. There is no statutory provision barring oral applications.

Dr. K. Pandalai, for the Respondents.—The certificate purports to have been given under sections 33 and 35 of the Stamp Act, under which certificates could not be granted. It cannot be taken to have been granted under section 32, as the document was produced more than 3 years after its execution.

Under section 37 no certificate could be granted. See Reference under section 57 of Act II of 1899 (1) and Venkatraman Ganap Hegde v. Shankarnarayan Sitaram Bhat (2).

As for amendment, the plaintiff could not be permitted to alter the nature of the suit.

JUDGMENT.—It is contended that the certificate of the Sub Collector being one under sections 32 and 37 of the Stamp Act, is binding on a Civil Court. The certificate purports to be under sections 33 and 35, which do not provide for certificates, but it is certainly not one under section 32, for the document was only produced before the Sub Collector 3 years after execution.

It is contended that no certificate could be granted under section 37 and reliance is placed on Reference under section 57 of Act II of 1899 (1) and Venkatraman Ganap Hegde v. Shankarnarayan Sitaram Bhat (2), which follows it. It is somewhat doubtful whether Reference under section 57 of Act II of 1899 (1) is now correct law, for certain kinds of postage stamps are now recognised under the Stamp Act, a point which was not considered by the Bombay High Court in Venkatraman Ganap Hegde v. Shankarnarayan Sitaram Bhat (2). I think it is unnecessary to decide this point, for I do not think the certificate was made under section 37, for there is no endorsement or certificate on the document that it is duly stamped, the only endorsement being that a penalty of Re. 1 had been levied, and for this reason the Sub Collector appears to have referred to section 35 in his order. It is then contended for petitioner that the plaint should have been allowed to be amended. The District Judge rejected the application on the ground that no written application had been filed, for his other reason, i. e., that the plaint did not contain distinct causes of action, is hardly of much value in deciding whether a plaint should be amended. However, an oral application would be quite sufficient.

(2) 42 Ind. Cas. 947; 19 Bom. L. R. 862.

The plaintiff and apparently defendant also thought the pro-note to be valid and I, therefore, think that this is pre-eminently a case where plaintiff should be allowed to fall back on his original cause of action.

The decrees of the lower Courts are set aside and the suit remanded to the District Munsif for fresh disposal after allowing the plaint to be amended. Costs will abide the result.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 562 OF 1916.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chatterjea and Mr. Justice Newbould.

GIRISH CHANDRA MONDAL AND OTHERS —APPELLANTS

NARENDRA NATH HALDAR AND OTHERS —RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Occupancy holding, non-transferable, transfer of—Transferee, recognition of, by landlord—Rent, arrears of, liability for—Sale of holding in execution of decree against old tenant, legality of.

D purchased a non-transferable occupancy holding from the tenant; the landlord, however, brought a suit for arrears of rent against the tenant and obtained a decree in 1901. In 1902 D paid the salami for mutation and was recognised as tenant by the landlord. In 1904 the landlord sued out execution of the decree he had obtained in 1901 against the old tenant, and brought the holding to sale and it was purchased by E, who transferred the holding by conditional sale to F. The plaintiff obtained a lease from F and brought the present suit for possession on establishment of his title:

Held, that the landlord having recognised D unconditionally as the tenant, the latter was not liable for the arrears of rent, and the old tenancy having come to an end, the landlord was not entitled to bring to sale the holding as the holding of the old tenant, and that, consequently, the suit must fail. [p. 761, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, 24 Pergannahs, dated the 27th September 1915, confirming that of the Munsif, Diamond Harbour, dated the 30th June 1914.

FACTS appear from the following preliminary judgment of Mr. Justice Chatterjea and Mr. Justice Newbould dated 26th November 1918:—

In this case the defendant No. 1 or rather his father was the transferee of a non-transferable holding. The defendant No 1 was recognised as a tenant by the landlord in the year 1902. Previous to that, however, the landlord had brought a suit for arrears of rent against the heir of the original tenant and obtained a decree in the year 1901. That decree was executed sometime in the year 1904 and the holding was purchased by some person through whom the plaintiff claims the holding in suit.

The lower Appellate Court has found that the defendant had been recognised by the landlord. The Courts below have, however, concurred in giving a decree to the plaintiff.

On appeal it is contended that the landlord having recognised the defendant No. 1, the transferee of the holding, as a tenant in the year 1902, the relationship between the landlord and the old tenant came to an end, that the decree for rent could not be executed against the holding, and that the sale could not affect the right of the defendant No. 1 who had been recognised as a tenant.

Before we proceed to consider the arguments addressed to us on this question by the learned Pleaders on both sides, it is desirable to have a finding upon the question whether the recognition of the defendant No. 1 by the landlord was conditional or not, as it is suggested on behalf of the respondent that the recognition might have been conditional on the defendant No. 1's paying up the decree for rent, and that the understanding might have been that the decree would be executed against the holding if it was not paid up by the transferee.

We do not find the question discussed in either of the Courts below, and we accordingly send the case back to the lower Appellate Court for a finding upon the question as to what was the understanding, if any, at the time of the recognition of the defendant No. 1 by the landlord. The finding should be returned to this Court within two months from this date.

The appeal will be retained on the file of this Court.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen (with him Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen), for the Appellant.—The main question for decision in this case is whether the Bengal Tenancy Act applies in a case between a landlord and an outgoing raiyat who has sold his right to another raiyat. The landlord recognises the transferer. Can the landlord eject the purchaser under section 66? The holding is a non-transferable occupancy holding.

According to section 65 he cannot be ejected but his tenure may be sold.

Here there is no question as to the fact that the tenant ceased to be a tenant before execution.

Section 169, clause (c), referred to.

If the landlord, having recognised me in 1902, sells the property in 1904, he cannot take the proceeds of sale between 1902 and 1904

Under Chapter XIV it is no longer a holding of tenure holder or landlord, as can be gathered from the proper interpretations of the sections.

According to Dayamoy's case the landlord is entitled to khas possession.

We purchased the holding in 1886 and 18 years after our purchase the landlord recognised us as tenants.

My contention is that it is not a rent decree and section 60 and Chapter XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act do not apply.

It is not necessary to have the sale set aside.

The whole case is that it was wrongly treated as a rent decree against an outgoing tenant.

Babu Hiralal Chakravarty, for the Respondent.—The question for decision is whether recognition after decree and before execution is valid or not. When the rent sale took place against a genuine decree the sale was valid. I am entirely unconcerned with the execution proceedings. At best I got a constructive notice. I am an innocent purchaser.

Because I am a bona fide purchaser, I cannot, of course, have some right.

Section 66 is only complementary to section 65 and vice versa, and this is the view taken by the Judicial Committee.

He cannot take advantage of his own wrong. In section 66 no third person is concerned.

He brought a suit to set aside the sale, etc., and decision was that it could not be set aside.

Recognition in the present case cannot have the effect of changing a non-transferable occupancy holding into a transferable one.

This recognition was made after sale and this was urged by us in the first Court.

After the sale was confirmed, a suit was brought by defendants against auction-purchaser and landlord to set aside the sale and confirm the possession. It was dismissed. Therefore the present case is res judicata.

[NEWBOULD, J.—Was this point taken in the first Court?]

Yes.

[Babu Surendra Chandra Sen.—It was not necessary to decide this point. The only question is whether he had any title]

A copy of the decree is in the record.

[Babu Surendra Chandra Sen.—No issue as to res judicata was made in the first Court. Application was treated as one under section 244, Civil Procedure Code (section 47, new Code). The copy of judgment is not here. The judgment is that it was treated as an application under section 244, Civil Procedure Code. Hence the point that the copy of the decree shows that the present suit will be res judicata cannot be allowed.]

From I. L. R. 14 Calcutta downwards all the decisions show that if the purchaser is a bona fide one he cannot be disturbed.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant No. 1 purchased a non-transferable occupancy holding from the tenant in the year 1283. The landlord, however, sued the tenant for arrears of rent and obtained a decree in the year 1901. In 1902 the defendant No. 1, who had purchased the holding from the tenant as stated above, paid salami for mutation of names and he was recognised as tenant by the landlord in 1902. Subsequently in the year 1904 the landlord put the decree which he had obtained in the year 1901 against the tenant into execution and in the sale which followed, the holding was purchased by defendant No. 2. The defendant No. 3 got the holding by conditional sale from the defendant

No. 2. The plaintiff obtained a lease from the defendant No. 3 and brought a suit for recovery of possession on establishment of his title.

It was contended before us on behalf of the appellant that after the defendant No. 1's purchase had been recognised by the landlord, the relationship of landlord and tenant between the landlord and the old tenant ceased and that, therefore, the provisions of section 65 or the provisions of Chapter XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act could not apply to the case.

It was suggested before us, on behalf of the respondent, that the landlord might have recognised the purchase on condition that the purchaser should pay up the arrears of rent (the rent decree), and we accordingly remanded the case for a finding upon the question as to what was the understanding, if any, at the time of the recognition of the defendant No. 1 by the landlord.

The learned District Judge has come to a finding that the recognition was subject to no condition, and the finding amounts to this, that the purchaser could not be held liable for the arrears of rent.

That being so, and the old tenancy having come to an end, the landlord could not put up to sale the holding (which had passed to the defendant No. (1) as the holding of the old tenant. Apart from the question whether the plaintiff's lessor who was the purchaser of a non transferable occupancy holding had acquired any right to the holding, we think that upon the finding arrived at the suit must fail.

The appeal is accordingly allowed and the suit must be dismissed with costs in all Courts

Appeal dismissed.

JAGANNATHA AYYANGAR—

RESPONDENTS.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 25, 36, 37—Transfer by debtor's transferee, avoidance of—Official Receiver, right of—Applicability of s. 36 where first transferee is only benamidar for his transferee—Colourable transaction—Enquiry by Court—Joinder of subsequent transferee as party—Appeal against Court's order by creditor, legality of—Remand, order of—Right of creditor appellant to be represented in further proceedings—Enquiry on report of Official Receiver, validity of—Madras High Court Rules under Provincial Insolvency Act, r. 2 (7)—Procedure.

It is not competent to a Court to institute an enquiry under section 36 or 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act on a report by the Official Receiver, but where such proceedings are taken without objection they are not invalid in toto, and may be validated by the Official Receiver converting his report into a properly stamped petition [p 762, col. 2]

The Court has jurisdiction under section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act to enquire into a petition by the Official Receiver for the avoidance of a transfer by the debtor's transferee, where the second transfer is only a colourable transaction and the debtor's transferee is only a benamidar for his subsequent transferee. In such an enquiry the second transferee is a necessary party. [p 762, col. 2; p 763, col.]

Quære.—Whether the word 'insolvent' in sections 36 and 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act would not include persons who have derived title from him and whether the sections do not contemplate action being taken against the transferees from the first transferee

An appeal against an order passed under sections 36 and 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act need not necessarily be presented by the Official Receiver but may be presented by a creditor of the insolvent. But the creditor will not be entitled to conduct proceedings had in pursuance of an order of remand by the Appellate Court. [p. 763, col. 2.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—Having regard to the provisions of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, there must, ordinarily, be a suit against the subsequent transferee to recover possession [p. 764, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Court, Tanjore, in Insolvency Petition No. 9 of 913

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. R Rangoswamy Ayyangar, for the Respondent, took the preliminary objections that the whole proceedings were ultra vires, because they were had on the Official Receiver's report. The District Judge was not moved by a petition from the Official Receiver, as he was required to do by the rules of the High Court, and the appeal was not presented by the Official Receiver.

Mr. M S. Ramanuja Ayyangar, for the Appellant.—The objection comes at a late stage. It was not raised in the lower Court nor even in the earlier stages of the appeal in this Court. In any event the want of form in the initiation of proceedings does not vitiate them altogether. The Official Receiver may now be directed to put in a petition.

As to the presentation of the appeal any creditor may file it; see Kumarappa Chettiar v. Murugappa Chettiar (1).

A transferee from the insolvent's transferee is within the terms of sections 36 and 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. Transfers by the debtor's transferee may be avoided under the sections. The law in England is to that effect under section 47 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1883. See Brown, Ex parte; Vansittart, In re (2), Norton Ex parte; Brall, In re (3) and Carter and Kenderdine's Contract Act, In re (4). In any event first transfer was merely a cloak for the second transfer. It virtually amounts to a transfer by the insolvent benami through the first transferor. As such it comes within the mischief of section 36.

Mr. Rangaswamy Ayyangar, for the Respondent.—There is no express provision in the Act for the avoidance of transfers by the debtor's transferee. The only remedy is by a suit for possession. He may plead bona fide purchase without notice. The definition of the word 'insolvent' cannot be made to include persons deriving title from him. The special procedure prescribed in the sections cannot be applied to cases not expressly covered by them.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—An attempt has been made to support the lower Court's order without reference to its merits, on the ground that it should not have been passed and the proceedings should not have been regarded as validly instituted on the Official Receiver's report without any regular petition. This objection is justified by rule 2 (7) of the rules passed by this Court for Official Receivers. But, it has, so far as appears, never been relied on either in the lower Court or when the case was heard here at an earlier stage. We are not prepared in these circumstances to treat the proceedings as invalid in toto. They will be allowed to go on conditionally on the Official Receiver converting his report into a properly stamped petition in proper form.

On the merits we read the report as embodying a request to the Court to avoid the transfers evidenced by two documents, referred to by the Official Receiver as Exhibits III and IV. Exhibit III is a transfer by the debtor to one Thiruvengadatha Ayyangar and Exhibit IV by the latter to the present respondent. The lower Court has refused relief on the ground that section 35, Provincial Insolvency Act, under which the application was made, authorises only the avoidance of transfers by the debtor, not by his transferees.

The first answer to this is that the Official Receiver's case in his report was that there was no real transfer by Exhibit III, but only a concealment of the insolvent's property in the name of another person and that, therefore, Exhibits III and IV should have been regarded altogether as a device for a transfer by the debtor to the respondent. The lower Court should have dealt with the case on this basis and must now do so. If this is established and there was no real transfer to any intermediate transferee, the respondent's objection to the evidence of Exhibit IV will be met.

Next I am prepared to agree with the lower Court that section 36 does not cover transfers by transferees from the insolvent, since its wording excludes them. The contrary is contended for because in England, as for instance in Brown, Ex parte; Vansittart, In re (2) and Norton, Ex parte; Brall, In re (3), such transfers were set aside with reference to the similarly worded section 47 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. That, however, is not conclusive, because the trustee concerned in those cases was able under the English rule 6 (e) to move the Court by application in respect of any settlement and there was no question on his proceeding by suit, as, in the absence of such a rule, the Official Receiver must proceed against third parties in India and as he will be able, if necessary, to proceed in this case.

But even if section 36 does not authorise the Official Receiver's employment of the special procedure provided by the Act in respect of Exhibit IV, we have been shown no reason why he was not entitled to employ it to obtain the avoidance of Exhibit III, and thus to lay the foundation for legal proceedings in respect of the former document. If then the lower Court rejects the contention already referred to as to the colourable character of Exhibit III, it must still deal with the Official Receiver's substantive contention as regards it.

In dealing with the case the lower Court will be well advised to have the transferee under Exhibit III, Thiruvengadatha Ayyangar, made a party in order to avoid or reduce litigation in future.

A preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal was taken on the ground that it was not presented by the Official Receiver, but by the creditor. The objection was unsustainable in view of the decision in Kumarappa Chettiar v. Murugappa Chettiar (1). This, however, we may observe, will not entitle appellant to the conduct of the petition in the lower Court, when it is dealt with there in pursuance of this order.

We set aside the lower Court's decision and remand the Official Receiver's application for re-admission and re disposal in the light of the foregoing. Costs to date will abide the result and be provided for in the order to be passed.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I agree but only wish to add a few words upon two of the legal questions argued before us. The learned Vakil for the respondent took the preliminary objection that the whole proceeding was ultra vires, because the District Judge was not moved by the Official Receiver by a petition. I am inclined to the view that the learned Judge should have called on the Official Receiver to embody the points on which he wanted a decision in a petition. Clause 7, rule 12 of this Court's rules contemplates a direction by the District Judge to the Official Receiver to present such a petition, when a report is submitted. In the Bankruptcy Act in England a motion in open Court is the procedure prescribed. See Robson's Law of Bankruptcy, page 946. But the District Judge has been allowed to pass orders without demur on the report. Although on the last occasion an objection was taken in this Court against that procedure, either the point was not argued or the learned Judges did not uphold this purely technical objection. At the same time in order that the proceedings may be made regular, I agree with my learned brother that the District Judge should now call upon the Official Receiver to present a formal petition. I am also of opinion that notice should go to Thiruvengadatha Ayyangar.

As regards the contention that sections 36 and 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act do not contemplate action being taken against transferees from the first transferee, I am not clear that the word insolvent would not include persons who have derived title from him. In England, it seems to have been taken for granted that subsequent transferees are equally within the mischief intended to be guarded against Under section 47 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1883, corresponding to section 36 of our Act, applications against subsequent transferees were entertained without objection. See Brown, Ex parte; Vansittart, In re (2) and Norton, Ex parte; Brall, In re (3) and Carter and Kenderdine's Contract Act, In re (4). May in Fraudulent Conveyances summarises the law thus:—"A voluntary settlement within section 47 is void against the trustee in the bankruptcy not from the date of the settlement, but from the date at which the title of the trustee has accrued, that is, the date of the act of bankruptcy, to which the title of the trustee relates back. Hence, a purchaser in good faith from the donee under the settlement of property comprised therein, who has purchased before the date at which the trustee's title accrued, has a good title to the property as against the trustee even though he purchased with notice that his vendor had acquired the property by means of a voluntary conveyance."

It must, however, be mentioned that a rule was passed in England under the Act in these terms:—"Applications to set aside or avoid any settlement, conveyance, transfer, security or payment or to declare for or against the title of the trustee to any property adversely claimed may be made, &c." This rule is wide enough to cover application against a subsequent transferee, as he can be said to claim adversely against the trustee. It may be advisable to enact a similar rule under the Provincial Insolvency Act. In the absence of such a rule and having regard to the words of sections 36 and 37, it is open to doubt whether the Official Receiver can ask that the subsequent transfer be annulled as against him.

In any event, I think that with reference to section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, there must ordinarily be a suit against the subsequent transferee to recover possession, because contentions as to his being a bona fide transferee for value without notice from an ostensible owner can be raised by the transferee. With these remarks I agree with my learned brother that the case should be remitted to the lower Court for further consideration. I also agree that the District Judge should have considered whether Thiruvengadatha Ayyangar was only a benamidar. If he came to that conclusion, the second transfer should be regarded as made by the insolvent. The fact that it was not made directly by him but through the agency of his nominee should not affect the enquiry under sections 36 and 37 of the Act.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908, O. XXI, r. 2—Execution of decree—Satisfaction of decree—Evidence of satisfaction, admissibility of—Payment certified but not recorded, whether can be recognised.

A Court executing a decree is entitled to go into evidence for the purpose of considering whether the decree-holder has certified satisfaction of the decree. Order XXI, rule 2, clause (3), of the Civil Procedure Code enables a Court to recognise a payment or adjustment which has been certified but not recorded. [p. 765, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Saran.

Mr. Jalgobind Prasad Sinha, for the Appellant.

Mr. Harnarayan Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question argued before me is whether under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure the Court can investigate the question whether the fact of satisfaction of a decree was certified to the Court by the decree holder.

In this case the appellant obtained a decree against the respondent. He put that decree in execution, when he was met with the plea by the respondent that the decree was satisfied and the fact of the satisfaction of the decree was certified to the Court by the decree holder. The petition put in by the decree holder is not forthcoming and the explanation is that it was either misplaced by the Court Amlas or that the decree-holder may have had something to do with it. The lower Appellate Court has on evidence come to the conclusion that the decree holder did certify the fact of the satisfaction of the decree to the Court and that, therefore, execution cannot proceed.

The learned Vakil on behalf of the decree-holder urges that the Court should not have gone into that question at all and that sub section 3 of Order XXI, rule 2, prevents the Court executing a decree from recognizing any payment or adjustment which has not been certified or recorded.

The scheme of Order XXI, rule 2, is not very complicated. First of all there is an obligation on the decree-holder to certify the payment or adjustment to the Court, whose duty it is to execute the decree, and there is also an obligation on the Court to record the same accordingly. Next, if the decree-holder does not certify to the Court, then the section gives power to a judgment-debtor to bring that fact to the notice of the Court, and it gives power to the Court to investigate that matter and if the Court finds that there were such payments as alleged by the judgment-debtor, the Court has power to record the same accordingly. Lastly, it imposes a bar upon a Court executing the decree from recognizing a payment or adjustment which has not been certified or recorded as aforesaid. In my opinion the Court may recognize a payment or adjustment which has been certified but not recorded. It seems to me that sub section 3 is perfectly clear on this point. Therefore, the position is that the Court finds on an investigation of facts that the decree-holder did certify the fact of such payment to the Court, although it was not recorded by the Court. In my opinion the Court was entitled to go into evidence for the purpose of considering whether the decree-holder did certify the fact of such payment to the Court. The finding of fact that the decree-holder did certify such payment to the Court is binding on me in second appeal, and I hold that the Court may recognize such payment although it has not been recorded by the Court.

I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs, which I assess at one gold mohur.

Appeal dismissed.

An application for time to amend an execution application and to put it in the form prescribed is not a 'step-in-aid' of execution within the meaning of Article 8 (5) of the Limitation Act, nor is an adjournment granted to convert an irregular application not placed on the file into a regular one a 'step-in-aid' of execution. FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. Subramanya Aiyar, for the Appellant.—Order XXI, rule 17 (2), Civil Procedure Code, is only an enabling provision. It does not abrogate the law as it stood before the enactment of the new Code. The decree-holder has alternative rights under the new Code. He can fall back on the date of re-presentation for purposes of limitation. Under the old Code there was no provision corresponding to Order XXI, rule 17 (2), Civil Procedure Code. Under the old Code, the decisions laid down that the date of re-presentation should be regarded as the date of applying in accordance with law.

Then, the grant of time by Court for amendment gives a fresh starting point. It is a "step in aid of execution" Abdul Kadir Routher v. Krishna Malamal Nair (1).

Mr. M. D. Devadoss, for the Respondents.—Order XXI, rule 17 (2), of the new Civil Procedure Code makes a deliberate departure from the old Code. The decisions under the old Code are no longer law. The rule neither expressly nor impliedly provides for alternative rights as suggested for the aprellants.

The grant of time is no step-in aid of execution. Abdul Kadar Rowther v. Krishna Malam l Nair (1) is clearly distinguishable. There the execution application was admitted and the petitioner was asked to furnish further particulars. Here the application has not been registered and numbered and time was given to present it in proper form.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The execution application before us was so far from being in the proper form when it was presented, that after eight months the petitioner appellant here crossed it out and amended it by re-writing it as a whole. The interval had been spent almost entirely in appellant's Vakil asking for and the lower Court mechanically granting extension of time in instalments of two weeks. The case is not creditable either to the Vakil or the Court.

The first point taken is that for purposes of limitation the date on which the application was finally admitted, not that on which it was first presented, is the starting point, because appellant's interest is to put that starting point as late as possible. Order XXI, rule 17 (2), of Schedule I of the Code of Civil Procedure, however, lays down that an amended application shall be deemed to have been presented on the date on which it was first presented. It is suggested that this provision does not abrogate the law, as it stood before its enactment, that the presentation should be treated as effected when the application was finally accepted, the decree-holder thus having his choice between two dates. It is sufficient that, even if the law before 1908 stood as is alleged, the wording of Order XXI, rule 17, is clear and general and does not countenance this suggestion.

Next it is said that time should run from some one of the various applications for time inscribed on the application, which have been referred to above, as a step in-aid of execution. But when the alleged step was taken there was no execution pending before the Court, which it could aid. This, therefore, also fails.

Lastly, it is urged that the appellant should be regarded as having really presented two applications, one of which must be deemed to have been withdrawn when he made a fundamental and comprehensive amendment above mentioned. In fact he then put in the original petition with an endorsement "filed amended" and paid for no second stamp; and it is impossible to identify any withdrawal of the old petition or presentation of a new petition with what he did.

The appeal against appellate order is dismissed with costs.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I agree.

Mr. S. Subramania Ayyar for the appellant has raised some ingenious contentions. The first is that the application for execution must be taken to have been presented on the date of its re presentation and not on the date of its original presentation. Order XXI, rule 17, clause 2, Schedule I of the Code of Civil Procedure, is against this argument. Then it was suggested that this rule is only an enabling provision and that the Legislature intended to provide alternative rights to the decree-holder and not to deprive him of the existing rights. This contention was based on the facts that before the Procedure Code of 1908 was passed, there was no provision corresponding to Order XXI, rule 17 (2) and that it was held by some Courts that for purposes of computing the period of limitation under Article 179 of the Limitation Act, it is the date of the re-presentation that should be regarded as the date of applying in accordance with law. The learned Vakil from these facts advanced a bold argument that the Legislature notwithstanding Order XXI, rule 17 (2), intended to perpetuate the old view of the law and provided an additional right to the decree-holder to enable him to count the original presentation date as also enuring for his benefit. I am unable to accept this contention. With knowledge of the old decisions the Legislature has deliberately enacted that it is the date of the original presentation that starts limitation.

The next contention was that inasmuch as the Court granted a dozen times time to enable the applicant to comply with the requirements of the Code, each of those endorsements granting time was a step in-aid of execution. Reliance was placed on Abdul Kadur Rowther v. Krishna Malamal Nair (1) for this argument. In that case an execution application was on the file of the Court and the applicant was given time to furnish particulars to enable the Court to deal effectually with that application. The grant of time was held by the learned Judges as a step in aid of execution. Even in that view, the present contention cannot be sustained. Here there was no application on the file and consequently there can be no step-in-aid of execution; what the applicant was asked to do was to make the application a valid one on which the Court's order can be passed; an adjournment granted to make an irregular application not placed on the file a regular one is not a step-in-aid of execution.

I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Revision—'Illegality' or irregularity, what is—Trial of wrong issue or misplacement of onus, whether justifies interference—Failure of justice for want of sufficient evidence.

In interfering with a decision of a lower Court under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, the High Court is not concerned with any error in the decision on matters of law or fact. It must be shown that there is a question of jurisdiction within the meaning of clauses (a) and (b) of section 115 or that there has been an act of actual illegality or irregularity in procedure affecting the merits. [p. 768, col. 1; p. 769, cols. 1 & 2.]

The words "illegality" or "irregularity" in section 115, clause (c), of the Civil Procedure Code refer to matters of procedure only. [p. 768, col. 1]

The plaintiff instituted a suit in the Court of Small Causes at Calcutta and obtained a decree. Against that decree an application under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, was made to the Original Side of the High Court. The grounds for making the application were (1) that a wrong issue was tried, (2) that the onus was wrongly placed upon the defendants, and 3) that there was no evidence to support the judgment of the Small Cause Court:

Held, (1) that the trial of a wrong issue amounted only to an error in law and did not amount to any illegality or irregularity in procedure; [p. 768, col. 2; p. 769, col. 2.]

(2) that the fact that the onus was wrongly placed did not entitle the High Court to interfere under section 115, Civil Procedure Code; [p. 768, col. 2.]

(3) (Per Woodroffe, J.) that to justify interference for want of evidence it must be shown that there was absolutely no evidence at all. [p. 770, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of Greaves, J., whereby he set aside a decree made in the suit in favour of the plaintiff by the Calcutta Court of Small Causes and directed a retrial.

The order was made in pursuance of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, and on appeal it was argued that the Court of Small Causes had jurisdiction to try the case, that it did exercise such jurisdiction and that it had not acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.

The suit was upon a policy of insurance issued by the defendants in favour of Messrs Gangjee Nangsee & Co., Rangoon, in respect of rice consigned by them to the plaintiff and shipped upon the SS. "Anthia": the claim was in respect of 483 bags of rice alleged to have been damaged by water.

The defendant Corporation admitted that 483 bags were damaged, but denied that the damage was caused by any of the adventures or perils insured against under the said policy.

The judgment of the Small Cause Court Judge, who tried the case, is as follows :—

"I don't think the defendant Company has discharged their onus of showing that the damage was from causes other than those included in policy. The evidence of the Surveyor does not appear satisfactory. He does not say that under no circumstances could the damage have been caused by the sea: percolation might have taken place removing traces of salt. He was the person best able to know whether the Company was liable or not. His first report would go to show that he thought the Company was liable."

There was an application for a new trial and the judgment is as follows:—

"I do not think the onus was misplaced on the defendants. They have failed to discharge the onus by proving that the goods were damaged by anything other than the perils of sea. So the application for new trial is dismissed."

The grounds upon which the application under section 115 was supported, were:—

1. That the wrong issue was tried.

2. That the Small Cause Court was wrong in holding that the onus was upon the defendants to show that the damage was from causes other than those included in the policy.

3. That there was no evidence to support the Small Cause Court's judgment.

The learned Judge, Greaves, J., held that the mere fact that the onus was wrongly laid, would not justify the Court in interfering under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, but he came to the conclusion that there was no evidence before the Court which would support the decree, nor any finding upon the construction of the policy which would support it, and on that ground he set aside the decree and directed a re-trial.

The question is not whether this Court would have come to the same conclusion as the Small Cause Court, for a mistake in law is not in itself a ground for interfering under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. In this case, in my judgment, there is no ground for interference under clauses (a) and (b) of the section, and if interference by this Court can be justified, it must be under clause (c), i. e., it must be shown that that Court acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. In the case of Shew Prosad Bung-hidhur v. Ram Chunder Haribux (1) Jenkins, C. J., said: "it appears to me that section 115 can only be called in aid when the failure of justice (if any) has been due to one or other of the faults of procedure indicated in that section," and Woodroffe, J., in the same case at page 339* said "then as regards the alleged irregularity, this according to the general trend of the cases applies to the commission of an error of procedure."

As regards the first ground, it was urged that the real issue was whether the goods were damaged by a period insured against, but that the Small Cause Court had framed the issue in a wrong form, viz., was the damage due to causes other than those included in the policy. This seems to me to be an error in law and does not amount to an illegality or material irregularity in the procedure.

As regards the second ground, viz., that the onus was put upon the defendants to shew that the damage was from causes other than those included in the policy.

This really amounts to a contention that the Court placed a wrong construction upon the policy and made an error in law in holding that the onus was on the defendants. The case was fully heard, no evidence was excluded, and as a matter of fact the plaintiff did in the first instance give some evidence, viz, on the 4th March, and on the further hearing the Solicitor for the defendants said he had no evidence beyond the documents and the commission, and in my judgment the mere fact that the Small Cause Court wrongly placed the onus on the defendants under the circumstances of this case is not sufficient to entitle this Court to interfere under section 115.

As regards the third ground that there was no evidence to support the judgment. It is not necessary to express any opinion as to whether it would be a sufficient ground to interfere under section 115, if I were to come to the conclusion in this case that there was no evidence to support the decision of the Small Cause Court, for in this case, in my judgment, there was some evidence. We have not to decide whether we should have come to the same conclusion upon such evidence as the Small Cause Court: it is sufficient to say that there was some evidence which had to be considered by the Small Cause Court. As for instance there was the report of the Surveyor that the bags were damaged by water: that the Surveyor assessed the damage as stated in his report, and that the consignee had agreed to take over the bags at the allowances therein referred to.

There was the Surveyor's evidence that a Surveyor cannot grant any allowance in such cases unless specially asked for, which, it was argued, meant asked for by the Insurance Company.

(1) 23 Ind Cas 977; 41 C. 323 at p. 338,

This, it was argued, amounted to an arrangement by the Surveyor on behalf of the Company with the consignee as to the amount payable by the defendants. The Court may have arrived at the conclusion that this was evidence of the liability of the defendants.

There was further evidence given on behalf of the plaintiffs by the gomashta that the Company never received damaged goods, and it was, therefore, argued that the goods must have been in good order and condition when loaded on board the ship; there was evidence that the rice was not new crop, and consequently "sweating" was not to be expected; further that only portions of the bags were damaged.

The question is not whether this Court would have been satisfied with this evidence; the question is, whether it can truly be said that there was no evidence, and I am unable to say that there was no evidence upon which the Small Cause Court could come to the conclusion at which it arrived.

It may be that if the matter had been open to us, we should have come to a different conclusion on the construction of the policy, and as to the law and we might not have been satisfied with the evidence, but that is not the question. The question is, whether the Small Cause Court acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, and in my judgment this has not been made out.

Consequently the appeal must be allowed and the decision of the learned Judge set aside. The appellants are entitled to their costs of the appeal and of the proceedings before Greaves, J.

WOODROFFE, J.—The question on this appeal is whether Greaves, J., did right in interfering with a decision of the Small Cause Court under section 115 of the Code. We are not concerned here with the merits of the case, whether in law or fact. The Judges of the Small Cause Court may have passed an erroneous decision, but the law does not allow us to interfere with their judgments on this ground. This is not an appeal. It must be shown either (a) that there is a question of jurisdiction, a term the meaning of which I have explained in my judgment in Shew Prosad v. Ram Chunder (1), or (b) that there has been an illegality or irregularity affecting the merits. These two words refer to matters of procedure. This must be so, for jurisdiction is dealt with under clauses (a) and (b) of section 115 and mere error in decision on matters of law and fact are not within the scope of the section. We are left then with acts, that is, illegal or irregular processual acts. Has there been such an illegality or irregularity here? It is to be noted that there was the ordinary trial, that evidence was given by the plaintiff in the first instance, that this evidence was all that the parties wished to give and the decree (whether it be right or wrong) was based thereon. The illegality and irregularity alleged is (a) that the wrong issue was tried, (b) that the onus was misplaced, (c) that there was absolutely no evidence to support the decision.

The issue tried between the parties raised the question of the liability of the defendants on the policy. But though the substantial question of liability on the policy was tried, it is said to have been tried in a wrong form, namely, were the goods damaged by a peril other than that insured against instead of, were the goods damaged by one of the perils insured against. Whether the one issue or the other was right, the matter is not in this case shown to be other than a question of law, seeing that if there was error, there was no irregularity or illegality other than that (if in particular cases there may be any which I need not decide) involved in the mere settlement of the form of the issue. There was in this case no evidence shut out nor call to start the evidence nor were the defendants prevented in any other respect from doing what they wished to do. The objection really is that the Court took a wrong view of the general law and put a wrong construction on the policy. Similar remarks apply to the argument as to the alleged misplacing of the onus. As a matter of fact the plaintiffs first gave evidence as if the onus were on them, and both parties gave all the evidence that they wished to give. There may be cases though, it is not necessary to finally decide the matter, where these grounds might be successfully taken, as for instance where a party was wrongly called upon to begin, or where he was not permitted to give, nor had an opportunity of giving, evidence on any particular point. But this is not the case here. It is to be observed that the learned Judge did not decide to grant revision on either of these grounds. On the contrary he has held that the question of onus is not a ground under section 115. The basis of his judgment is that there was absolutely no evidence, to support the decree. This, however, is not made out. There is some evidence though whether the evidence given made out a case is not a matter which we are here entitled to consider. Before we can interfere it must be shown that there was absolutely no evidence at all. There was evidence of the statements and conduct of the Surveyor. His report shows that a certain number of bags were damaged by water and that he and the claimants together agreed that certain allowances for damage should be allowed. Mr. Stewart says that the Surveyor cannot grant any allowance in such cases unless specially asked for, that is (as I read it) by the Insurance Company. The plaintiff's case is that the Surveyor fixed a sum as being payable by the defendant Company. The Judges may have thought that this evidence established liability.

Again evidence was given that the Shipping Company never received goods in bad order, evidence excluding the possibility of sweating, some evidence as to the weather and that the goods might have been damaged by sea water. All this may be insufficient to establish the conclusion of the Judges, for the Surveyor denies authority to make any admission, and what the Shipping Company do is not evidence against the Insurance Company. Nextly the mere general statement about salt water is met by evidence of the actual tests applied. Had the case been tried by us, it may well be that we would have taken a different view of the construction of the document and the law applicable and that we would have considered the evidence given as insufficient to establish the defendants' liability. But as I have said, we cannot go in revision into the question whether the judgment is right or wrong in law. It may be wrong in law, but it must be shown that there was an act of actual illegality or irregularity within the meaning of section 115, Civil Procedure Code, which entitles us to interfere. This the respondent has, under the circumstances of this case, failed to establish and it has been shown that the grounds on which Greaves, J., interfered cannot be supported in fact. The appeal must, therefore, be allowed, and the decision of the learned Judge set aside. The appellants are entitled to the costs of this appeal and of the proceedings before Greaves, J.

LAGMANNA BASANNA KURANI—RESPONDENT.

Inam, grant of, for services rendered and to be rendered—Wilful default—Resumption—Landlord and tenant—Adverse possession during currency of lease—Ouster of tenant by stranger, effect of.

Where lands are granted on account partly of services already rendered and partly of services to be rendered in the future, the grantor is entitled to resume the lands by reason of the wilful default of the grantee in the service which was a condition precedent to his enjoyment of the lands. [p. 773, col. 2: p. 778, col 1.]

Ordinarily, during the currency of a lease no adverse possession can be obtained by a third party against the landlord, but it is otherwise where, to the knowledge of the landlord, his tenants are ejected by a stranger after open conflict with him, and the new tenants pay their rents to the stranger. In such a case the landlord's rights are openly invaded and his rights openly challenged and jeopardised and adverse possession begins to run against him. [p. 776, col. 1; p. 777, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Belgaum, in Suit No. 101 of 1913.

Mr. Setalvad (with him Mr. S. R. Bakhle), for the Appellant.

Mr. Ooyaji (with him Mr. S. S. Patkar), for Respondent No. 22.

JUDGMENT.

BATCHELOR, ACTING C. J.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree of the first class Subordinate Judge of Belgaum, Mr. Koppikar. The suit was brought for possession of certain lands with mesne profits. The original defendants Nos. 1 to 24 were tenants in occupation of the lands in suit, but the real combatant defendant was defendant No. 25, who is the Sar Desai of Vantmuri. The history of the litigation is set out in the learned Subordinate Judge's judgment, but it will be convenient to refer to a few of the more important facts now, in order to bring them into early prominence. It is admitted that the original owner of the lands in suit was the Desai, the predecessor of the present defendant No. 25, to whom I shall in future allude as the defendant. So early as 1774 A. D. his ancestors made a grant of these lands to the plaintiff's ancestors by the Sanad, Exhibit 201. A pedigree of the plaintiff's family, so far as we are concerned with it, will be found in the Subordinate Judge's judgment. The plaintiff's ancestors acted as Chitnis and storekeeper for the Desai, but in 1843 the right of service as storekeeper was discriminated from the service as Chitnis, and went to another branch of the family. We are not further concerned with any rights connected with the service as storekeeper. The office of Chitnis remained with the plaintiff's family together with the lands in suit. In the genealogy appearing in the lower Court's judgment, it may be observed that Nilkanth, Gopal and Balkrishna were adopted sons, and their adoptions were in each case duly recognised by the Desai. Balkrishna left no son, and his widow Sundrabai was unable to serve as Chitnis. The Desai, therefore, allocated the lands and the appurtenant cash remuneration to other persons whom he temporarily employed to discharge the duties of the office. In November 1879 Sundrabai mortgaged the lands to the Desai for a sum of Rs. 2,500 and the Desai was put in possession. In 1881 Sundrabai adopted Narayan, who attained majority in 1889, and died either in 1902 or 1903, according to the plaintiff's version. In August 1889 Narayan after reaching his majority redeemed the mortgage, and the instrument, Exhibit 56, bears upon it an endorsement of satisfaction. In October 1889 Narayan purported to let out the lands under Kabuliyats to six tenants. These Kabuliyats, which are Exhibits 179 to 184, are for a term of twelve years, and would, therefore, expire in 1901. The six tenants, however, proved recalcitrant, and Narayan was unable to obtain from them any payment of their rents. He, therefore, filed suits against them, and in those suits obtained decrees for the rents of the years 1890 and 1891. The rents of those years were actually recovered from those tenants by Narayan. In 1894 Narayan brought other suits for the rents of 1892-1893 against the six original tenants, and certain other persons who had been put in occupation as tenants by the Desai. In 1896 Narayan obtained from the Court a decree in the suits of 1894, but admittedly he never succeeded in getting that decree executed, and admittedly he nevermore recovered any rents in respect of these lands. In other words, after this struggle with the Desai in 1889 he abandoned the matter and acquiesced in the Desai's position.

The facts which I have above set out are, I believe, not in dispute between the parties. The learned Judge below raised two principal issues, one of them dealing with the true construction of the Sanad, Exhibit 201, and the other raising the question whether the Desai had a defence to the plaintiff's suit on the ground of his adverse possession. As to the construction of the Sanad the learned Judge found in favour of the plaintiff, but finding that the Desai had proved adverse possession for a period exceeding twelve years, he on this ground dismissed the suit. The judgment, as is invariably the case with Mr. Koppikar's judgments, is a careful document, and for my own part, I agree with the learned Judge below in all that he says as to the questions of fact in this suit, and those questions of fact are, in my opinion, all important. I differ from Mr. Koppikar as to the construction of the Sanad, but nonetheless I desire to say that my judgment is largely based upon my own view as to the facts of the case and if I am right as to those facts, it seems to me that there can be no doubt either of the justice or of the propriety of the decree under appeal. No doubt at first it seems a plausible thing to say that a Court should be loath to defeat the grant of 1774 by reason of adverse possession on the part of the grantor's successor, but if broad propositions of this kind are to go for anything, the case may be put even more favourably for the defendant. For, whereas as I read this Sanad, the lands were granted in consideration of service, the plaintiff in this suit seeks to dispossess the defendant and claims the lands absolutely, repudiating any obligation to serve, and denying that the defendant Desai has any interest in the property. Upon this point it may be well to notice at once that the Desai's position is in my view neither extravagant nor oppressive, and he says in his deposition, which appears to me to be a candid and truthful statement, "If service is rendered, then only the lands in suit are to be held by the plaintiff's family from generation to generation. If they refuse to render the service I have the right of resuming the lands. I have also that right if they deny my title as owner." Now it is an admitted fact that at least for ten years the defendant Desai has been in exclusive occupation and enjoyment of these lands, and throughout that time the plaintiff's family have acquiesced in that position. Now after the lapse of this prolonged period this Hindu lady, acting through her agent, her brother, sues to oust the defendant.

With these preliminary observations, I go now to the first question to be answered. What is the true meaning of the Sanad, Exhibit 20? That document runs as follows:—

'To

Rajeshri Narayan Jivaji Chitnis and Kotnis belonging to Gotra Kashyapa Sutra Ashvalayan.

Salutations and request of friend Basavaprabhu walad Lakhamgowda Desai, Nadgowda, Pargane Hukkeri, Sar Desai of several Mahals and Nadgowda Mamle Murtujabad. The Sooryear Khamas, Sabain, Maya Alaf 1175 (i. e., 1774 A. D.) Vritti Patra given in writing by me is as follows:— Your father and you have been serving us faithfully since the time of my father. You have been very useful in serving us. You are serving in many ways as Chitnis and as Koti clerk. Thinking that you are a useful person and that you are competent to perform both these services and that it is necessary to grant to you only (that is, exclusively) the Vritti appertaining to these services and to continue it with you from generation to generation, I have granted to you the Vritti appertaining to the services of Chitnis and Kotnis and the Vritti appertaining to service in respect of the management of the Koti. The emoluments granted in your favour in respect of these two services are as particulars mentioned below."

Then after setting out the particulars, the document concludes:

"I have granted you in Inam as above, Rs. four hundred as emoluments in cash and the said Kamat lands in respect of both services. And I have settled and granted you the Kaulavani of the aforesaid Pargane and Kanu (rights) in respect of Sanads, etc. You, your sons, grandsons and other descendants from generation to generation are to go on enjoying the above property, and you and your descendants from generation to generation are to perform both the services and live happily. There is no reason for any one to cause obstruction. May this be known."

Mr. Setalvad for the plaintiff has urged that upon a true reading of this document there is a sharp distinction between the cash which is to be the remuneration for future services, and the lands which, according to the learned Counsel, are granted in exchange for services already rendered. But upon carefully attending to the language of the document, I feel sure that the vernacular words cannot bear the weight of any such distinction. It is quite true that the word 'Vetan' remuneration, occurs after the word 'cash', but that after all is the place where one would expect to find it, and if the document be read as a whole, it seems to me impossible to deny the force of the constant occurrence together of the cash and the lands, and the constant bracketing and coupling of the services already rendered with the services to be rendered in future as constituting jointly the integral consideration for the grant. The thing itself is more than once called a Vritti, and that word is defined in Molesworth's Dictionary as meaning any office, situation or business, senses which are familiar to the Courts in connection with this particular word. If reference be made to Exhibits 202, 242, 203 and 45[illegible], it will, I think, be seen that the sense which I am attributing to the instrument is the sense which the parties to it have always accepted. In Exhibit 202, for instance, which is a letter from the Desai to Nilkanth, we have the following passages:—

"The deceased Rudropant had no issue. He, therefore, took you in adoption. As to that, you requested that the adoption should be confirmed by (us) the Sarkar. On a consideration thereof, it appears to us that the fact of your having been adopted by Rudropant is true. Your adoption is, therefore, confirmed and you are made owner to his Vritti. Therefore, the land, Haks and Kanubabs and the Kaulavni, etc., in the several villages appertaining to the said Chitnishi Vritti acquired by and continued from your ancestors...are granted. The whole land including the above and Haks, Kanubabs and emoluments in respect of writing as continued from ancient times, you should enjoy and you should do your own writing work in respect of Chitnishi and by enjoying the lands, etc., as mentioned above you should faithfully perform the service of the Sarkar."

In Exhibit 242, which is a letter to the Desai from Nilkanth, we find the following language:—

"You the Sarkar have now made me the owner of the Vritti of Rudropant and granted a Sanad in my favour to the effect that I should manage the work of writing in respect of Chitnishi and in respect of the Jamabandi of the several villages and go on enjoying the property... I shall accordingly enjoy the said Vritti and perform the two duties of writing and live honestly and loyally in the service of the Sarkar."

These documents, if their assistance is needed, seem to me to confirm the meaning which I am attributing to Exhibit 202, that is to say, they seem to support the construction that the lands in question and the cash allowances are granted, to use the language of the Privy Council, pro servitis impensis et impendendis, that is, on account partly of services already rendered and partly of services to be rendered in the future. In other words, as I read the Sanad, the continued performance of the services, is upon the true construction of the grant, the condition on which the lands are to be held, and if that is so, then according to the Privy Council's decision in Forbes v. Meer Mahomed Tuquee (1), the lands may unquestionably be resumed for wilful default. The decision which I have just cited was considered by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Lakhamgavda v. Keshav Annaji (2), but I cannot concede that the judgment of the Chief Justice affords any support to the plaintiff's case in our present circumstances. All that was laid down there was that, where the grant is a grant in consideration of past and future services, as here, and where, as here, there is no express provision in the grant that the interest in the lands should cease when the services are no longer required, the lands held under the grant are not resumable at will. But then that is not the defendant's case. He claims to be able to resume the lands, not at will, but by reason of the wilful default in the service which was a condition precedent to the enjoyment of the lands.

That there was a wilful default cannot, I think, be questioned. The mortgage of 1879 was made by Sundrabai to the Desai when the latter was an infant, and at that time the managers of the Sansthan were the Desai's mother assisted, if one should say assisted, by a person named Bhau Ramchandra. This Bhau Ramchandra is found upon the evidence to have been related to the family of Sundrabai, and it is enough to say that ultimately he had to be removed for mismanagement of the estate. In 1885 the Desai attained majority, and in 1889 the mortgage money was paid to him. It is important, however, to observe that the endorsement on Exhibit 56 recites that the deed is given back. It does not recite that possession of the lands was delivered to Narayan, and the Desai, whom I believe, has sworn that possession of the lands was not delivered. It is true that on the day before the redemption Narayan made the statement, Exhibit 462, upon which Mr. Setalvad has placed reliance. But it cannot, I think, be effectively argued from this statement that Narayan genuinely professed an honest willingness to continue the service as Chitnis. The statement is very much in the form of a self-serving petition, the object being that his name should be entered in the accounts of the Sansthan, and he says that "Nazrana in respect of adoption and the heirship inquiry has already been given by Sundrabai according to the custom of the Sansthan." The statement appears to have been made in the Kutcheri of the Sansthan in the presence of some representative of the Desai, and it would seem that Narayan's attention was called to the fact that no record was discoverable showing that Nazrana had been paid in respect of the adoption. "We were asked", therefore, he says, "to state whether or not we are now willing to pay Nazrana in respect of the sanctioning of the adoption. As to this, I beg to state that at present my family is in straitened circumstances as debts etc., have been incurred. I am, therefore, willing to act up to any order that may graciously be passed and to pay now only whatever amount, etc., that may be found due this day to the Sansthan and to render service etc." That, no doubt, so far as words go, is a profession of willingness to serve, but as it seems to me, a profession of willingness to serve on terms which were Narayan's and were not the Desai's. Admittedly, however, Narayan never served, and though the Desai's books were put in evidence in the Court below, it is not suggested that any Nazrana was ever paid by Narayan, nor is it alleged that the adoption of Narayan was ever recognised by the Desai. The Desai himself in his statement made on the 21st January 1894, Exhibit 200, explains what happened in these words: "The opponent (i. e., Narayan) had been told to perform service. He did not perform it. He absconded. The order to perform service had been made orally. The remuneration for service had been settled previously, that is, before the Vahivat came into my hands. After the administration came into my hands, he was told to join service. He absconded." It is indeed clear upon this record not only that Narayan failed to offer himself for service on the terms that the Desai could approve, but that he lost no time in putting himself in a position of irreconcilable hostility against the Desai whose tenants he sought to estrange. In his deposition in the present suit the defendant speaks as follows on the present point: "On the satisfaction of the mortgage, I told the plaintiff's husband that if he was not able to render the service, that he might appoint somebody to do it and learn the work under him and promised to deliver the lands if he did so. He did not appear to render the service and did not depute any one for the purpose."

So much as to the position occupied by Narayan. But what concerns us more intimately is the position of the plaintiff herself, and that is disclosed in no uncertain terms in the early paragraphs of the plaint. In the first paragraph, after setting out the lands in suit, she goes on: "The said lands have been continuing as Pot Inam from ancient times with the plaintiff's family from the ancestors of the defendant No. 25, the Khatedar, and are of the full ownership of the plaintiff." And in paragraph 3 she says: "that the plaintiff's husband Narayan Balkrishna recently died, and that she herself, the plaintiff, is his only heir." I conclude, therefore, that in this case there has been not only a wilful default to render the services which were the condition precedent to the enjoyment of the lands, but the present suit is based upon an open disavowal and repudiation of the defendant's interest in the property. It appears to me, therefore, that on the terms of the Sanad the defendant was, and is, entitled to resume the lands.

Next it remains to deal with the question of possession. In the first place, it is essential for the plaintiff not only to prove her title, but to show that within twelve years next preceding the suit she had possession of the land: see the Privy Council's decision in Dharani Kantal Lahiri v. Gabar

Ali Khan (3). Well, if that is the burden lying upon the plaintiff, it appears to me that a complete answer to the suit is the fact that certainly during the twelve years preceding the suit the possession of this property was with the defendant and not with the plaintiff. This fact is clearly proved, and so far as I have understood the arguments, is not contested by the appellant. I need not, therefore, labour the point, but will say that to me it is plain upon the record that at least ever since 1893, the defendant has sole possession in his own right, that his tenants have been in occupation, and that through them he has received all the rents and profits of the lands and has received them to the knowledge of the plaintiff and her predecessor.

Upon the question whether the defendant's possession can be regarded throughout as adverse or not the appellant relies upon the twelve year rent notes obtained by Narayan in 1889, and the argument has been that the possession of the Desai could not be adverse as against Narayan until those leases had expired in 1901. Unfortunately for that argument, the learned Judge below has found that Kabuliyats and rent notes in question are not honest documents, but were obtained by Narayan in collusion with the tenants and in fraud of the Desai. That finding is fully explained in the last paragraph of the Subordinate Judge's judgment, and I need not say more than that I agree with the reasoning there employed. It is notorious that Indian peasants are ready enough to pass such rent notes to any one, the peasant's sole desire being to be allowed to stay on the land which he occupies. As to Mr. Setalvad's contention that this young man would not have been able to collude with the tenants to the detriment of the powerful Desai, the answer appears to me to be extremely simple, for, I think, that any misrepresentation made by Narayan would have produced the desired effect, as for instance, if Narayan had told the tenants that his adoption had been sanctioned by the Desai. We are, however, without any evidence as to what precisely happened, so that all this is a matter of speculation. I wish only to say that the theory that Narayan colluded with the tenants is not, in my opinion, exposed to the slightest difficulty on the ground of actual practice. I should add that I myself feel quite sure that in October 1889 and in the events that had by then happened, Narayan certainly did not suppose that he was honestly entitled to take these rent notes from the tenants, or to obtrude himself into the position of the landlord. I think his object was, as is not infrequent in such cases, merely to create documentary evidence to assist him in the future.

But then it was said that the Desai's own accounts from 1891 to 1911 indicate that in his opinion these lands were still held by the plaintiff as remuneration for the Chitnis service. We have been carefully taken through all these entries by the learned Counsel, and though at first sight they seem to raise a difficulty in the defendant's way, that difficulty is, I think, dispelled by a little consideration. In the first place, ever since 1889 it is indisputable that the Desai has been in open hostility to the plaintiff, openly claiming that the lands had been resumed because there had been default in the service. It is unlikely, therefore, that he would make himself, or ever authorize any agent to make, account entries which are flagrantly in contradiction with his own sustained action. The explanation, however, is not far to seek. In the first place, it is noteworthy that this point is not referred to in the long and elaborate judgment of Mr. Koppikar, so that I must infer that at the trial the plaintiff felt that no importance could attach to it. It was reserved for the Court of Appeal. That is the more unfortunate, because both the Desai himself and his Karbhari were examined at the trial, and if any point were to be made by the plaintiff of the Desai's account books, it was, in my opinion, manifestly essential that that point should be put either to the Desai or to his Karbhari or both in order to afford them an opportunity of giving a reply. As I say, no such opportunity was afforded, and the point was reserved for the Court of Appeal after all the evidence had been finally closed. Even here, however, it so happens that the matter is not difficult. I fully accept Mr. Coyaji's explanation, which is that as a matter of accounts these lands were in the Desai's office earmarked or allocated to the Chitnisi office, and have never yet been formally dissociated from that office. The entries, therefore, would be continued to be made by the clerks in the ordinary routine, and Mr. Coyaji has stated without contradiction that even after the Desai's written statement was filed in this suit, the entries continued to be made as before. It seems to me, therefore, that no use can be made of these entries in contradiction of the clear attitude which the Desai has preserved since 1889. If, then, the learned Judge below is right, as I think he is right, in finding that the rent notes were collusive, there also is an end of the plaintiff's case, for it cannot be that the plaintiff's position is improved by reason of the collusion of her predecessor-in-title.

Lastly, I will shortly state my opinion upon the assumption that Mr. Koppikar and I are wrong in regarding the Kabuliyats as collusive. Even so, I do not think that the result would be different. There is no need to cast any doubt upon the general proposition that ordinarily during the currency of a lease no adverse possession can be obtained by a third party against the landlord seeing, that the landlord is not usually entitled to resume possession until the expiry of the lease. But as Mr. Justice Batty's elaborate judgment in Tarubai v. Venkatrao (4) shows, this broad proposition is subject to qualification and reserve. At page 57 of the Report the learned Judge observes: "In the case of landlord and tenant, the mere ouster of the tenant was shown to be insufficient so to affect the landlord as to put him to the necessity of vindicating his position. But when the landlord was entitled to rent and the rent was not merely left unpaid (a fact which would give the real owner no unmistakeable notice of his rights being infringed), but was actually refused and paid to another person, then there would be such virtual dispossession of the rightful owner as to put him to his remedy."

Now here the facts are exceptionally strong against Narayan and the plaintiff. To their knowledge, their tenants are ejected by the Desai after open conflict with him, and ever since 1893, these new tenants of their enemy pay their rents to the Desai. It is, I think, upon these facts not possible to resist the conclusion that Narayan's alleged rights were openly invaded, and his alleged title was openly challenged and jeopardised by the Desai. It follows, therefore, in the words of Mr. Justice Batty, that he was put to his remedy against the Desai, whose acts manifestly assailed his own position and not merely the position of the tenants.

I have already observed that after the payment of the mortgage money, though the mortgage bond was handed back, the lands were not delivered. I may now add that Narayan's successful suits of 1892 and 1894 were brought against the tenants only, and that the Desai was no party to them. The judgments in Narayan's favour proceed merely on the execution of the Kabuliyats by the tenants, and not on any finding that Narayan had made over actual possession of the lands to the tenants. Moreover, the Desai not being a party, the Courts neither did nor could consider the question of actual possession, as that question arose between Narayan and the Desai. But upon this question we have in the present suit very notable admissions. The plaintiff's own brother and agent who is conducting this suit on her behalf Keshav Shesbgiri, Exhibit 194, says in cross-examination: 'I am not prepared to swear that the lands were not granted as remuneration for service. I do not know if plaintiff's ancestors did or did not render service to the family of defendant No. 25. Defendant No. 25 has been in possession of the plaint lands for the last 10 or 15 years, and enjoying the profits wrongfully. Plaintiff's husband last recovered the rent of the plaint lands in 1891-92, but not afterwards. Defendant No. 25 recovered rents subsequent to 1891-92. In 1892-93 defendant set up title as owner and claimed to be in possession and refused to part with it." Then Balvant Daso, Exhibit 206, a witness for the plaintiff and a person who bears no good-will towards the Desai, says in cross-examination: "I cannot say from what tenants defendant No. 25 has been taking Kabuliyats in respect of Subraya's portion since the miscellaneous proceedings of 1892 93. Since 1895 defendant No. 25 has been recovering the rent of Subraya's portion of the plaint lands." And the plaintiff's witness Nilappa Ningappa, Exhibit 219, speaks to much the same effect. "I do not remember," he says, "how long the tenants of defendant No. 25 have been occupying the plaint lands. It may be 20 or 22 years. They have been paying the rent to defendant No. 25 and they told me so 7 or 8 years ago. They commenced paying rent to defendant No. 25 about 20 years ago." In the face of reluctant admissions of this sort, it seems to me that the Court is bound to believe the otherwise credible and respectable testimony of the Desai, Exhibit 199, when he says: "I did not deliver possession of the lands after satisfaction of the mortgage. I have remained in possession all the time since satisfaction of that mortgage in my capacity as owner." On this evidence I come to the conclusion that ever since 1893 on any computation the Desai has excluded the plaintiff and her predecessor from possession and enjoyment to their knowledge and in open assertion of his adverse claim. The facts seem to me to be so strong that if Mr. Justice Batty and I are right in thinking that in special circumstances adverse possession can run against a landlord during the currency of a lease, I cannot doubt that such possession will run against Narayan in the circumstances of this case even upon the violent assumption that the Kabuliyats taken by him from the tenants were not taken collusively and in fraud of the defendant.

Upon all these grounds, I am of opinion that the decree of the Court below is right and ought to be affirmed with costs, this appeal being dismissed.

KEMP, J.—Plaintiff sues to recover possession as owner of the plaint lands together with mesne profits. Defendant No. 25 is the Sar Desai of Vantmuri and the plaintiff's claim is based on a Sanad granted by the then Desai to one Narayan Jivaji, plaintiff's ancestor, on 24th September 1774 (Exhibit 201). Plaintiff's case is that the lands comprised in the Sanad were given to her family as a sub-Inam without any condition or power of resumption and that the service of Chitnis or secretary rendered by the members of the plaintiff's family was in consideration of a money payment which used to be made to the family and that the grant was not in consideration of past and future services in that office. Defendant No. 25 alleges that the subject of the grant was the office and not the lands, that the office used to be remunerated by the income of the lands, that he has the right of dispensing with the service and resuming the lands and that he did both about 1890-91. The other defendants are tenants on the lands in question.

In my opinion, it is of little avail to look at the Sanads in decided cases to construe the Sanad in suit. The construction of a Sanad in each case depends on its terms.

The present Sanad acknowledges the services of the grantee and his father in the capacities of secretary and storekeeper and records that the right of both these services shall be allotted to this grantee and continued to him from generation to generation. The remuneration for these services is detailed as property consisting of lands at Kamatnur and other places and Rs. 200 in cash payable every year with some perquisites for the office of secretary and an equal amount and lands in different villages for the office of storekeeper. The Sanad then goes on to say: "I have granted you in Inam as above Rs. 200 as emoluments in cash and the said Kamat lands in respect of both services. And I have settled and granted you the Kaulavani of the aforesaid Pargane and Kanu rights in respect of Sanads, etc. You, your sons, grandsons and other descendants from generation to generation are to go on enjoying the above property, and you and your descendants from generation to generation are to perform both the services and live happily."

The proper construction of this document seems to me to be grant of an office to be remunerated from cash and lands. I do not agree with the plaintiff's contention that the lands were granted apart from the services, nor with the defendant's contention that he has the right of dispensing with the services and resuming the lands. So long as the grantee and his descendants performed the services, they were entitled to the remuneration of the cash and the lands.

In 1843 a dispute arose between the two branches of the plaintiff's family, which was settled by the Desai allotting to one branch this right of service as storekeeper with the cash and lands pertaining thereto and to the other branch (represented in this case by the plaintiff) the office of Chitnis with the cash and lands relating to that office.

Subsequently, the holder in 1843 of the office of Chitnis died without issue and his adopted son Nilkanth, on paying the customary Nazrana was recognised by the Desai, who invested him with the office and the lands and perqui-ites of his adoptive father and enjoined him to the writing work connected with the office of secretary, enjoy the lands, etc., as aforesaid and render the service with devotion. After Nilkanth's death Gopal was recognised as his adopted son, invested with all the rights and powers of his ancestors and directed to discharge his duties with devotion.

After Gopal, his adopted son Balkrishna was recognized on agreeing to pay the customary Nazrana and perform the service (Exhibit 459).

On Balkrishna's death, as his widow Sundrabai was unable to perform the service or depute a fit person to do so, the Desai withheld some of the perquisites and applied the proceeds towards the remuneration for the service, which apparently he took from others. In 1881, Sundrabai adopted Narayan, the plaintiff's deceased husband. Narayan made an application on 13th August 1889 to have the perquisites restored as he was willing to serve the Desai. He also prayed that he might be excused the payment of the customary Nazrana (Exhibit 492). It does not appear that the Desai ever recognized his adoption or accepted his offer of service. Indeed he says that Narayan refused to perform the services which would be a sufficient ground to defeat this suit for the performance of services was a condition precedent to the enjoyment of the lands.

On 25th November 1879, Sundrabai mortgaged the lands with the Desai with possession for Rs. 2,500 (Exhibit 56). The Desai was then a minor and did not attain his majority until 1895.

On 14th October 1889, Narayan redeemed the mortgage and received back the deed with satisfaction endorsed upon it, but the Desai remained in possession of the lands.

The plaintiff contends that Narayan was in possession by virtue of Kabuliyats passed by the tenants on 8th October 1889, but these Kabuliyats (Exhibits 179—184) were obtained from tenants who had come in through the Desai during the currency of the mortgage.

Now it may be that in a grant of this kind when the last holder of the office dies without issue, the services may be performed by somebody deputed by his widow. In the present case, as Sundrabai was unable to perform the service and did not depute any one to do it for her, the Desai withheld some of the perquisites and applied the proceeds towards the remuneration for the service from others. Narayan, Sundrabai's adopted son, did not perform the service nor was his adoption recognised by the Desai.

What, however, we are concerned with in the present case is that the plaintiff, who is Narayan's only heir, claims the lands as owner, and I am of opinion that having regard to my construction of the terms of the Sanad her claim as owner must fail. Where the office is alive and involves the continuous performance of the duties, I think she can only claim the remuneration from, as distinct from the ownership of, the lands if she depute somebody acceptable to the Desai to perform the services. But her suit claiming the property absolutely must fail.

Then it is shown the Desai was in possession in 1902. The plaint was filed on 21st December 1912. In order to succeed the plaintiff here must show not only title against the defendant but that she was dispossessed within twelve years of suit [Dharani Kanta Lahiri v. Gabar Ali Khan (3)]: this she cannot do. Narayan died in 1902-1903. Even if the Kabuliyats passed to Narayan in October 1889 by the six tenants who were put in by the Desai during the mortgage be considered as bona fide, it is proved that all these six tenants had been ejected by the Desai, who was in possession through his tenants for more than twelve years before the suit.

But I question whether Narayan really ever secured possession after the mortgage. The six tenants had passed Kabuliyats to the Desai during the mortgage: when it was paid off the then existing Kabuliyats had not expired and before their expiry Narayan purported to secure these tenants as his tenants. The period of those Kabuliyats was twelve years and it is improbable that the Desai, who all along contested Narayan's right, would give over possession as alleged. It is a matter of common knowledge that it is an easy matter to secure a Kabuliyat from a tenant of this class. Such a Kabuliyat is not therefore of high probative value. It is true Narayan obtained decrees for rent up to 1891 but to those suits the Desai was not a party and they cannot, therefore, be taken as evidence of possession against him.

Then it is contended that the entries in the Desai's account books show that he admitted the land belonged to Narayan and that he did not really set up an adverse title as against him. I do not think much value can be attached to the contents of these entries because it is shown that the entries, continue in this form right up to the filing of the accounts and, even if the Desai knew of the form of these entries and that they would be used as evidence against him, they cannot affect the legal rights of the parties as established by the clear words of the Sanad. If the plaintiff says that the Desai waived the right of service, the answer to that is that is not the plaintiff's suit.

I, therefore, think the suit fails and the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

GANGA SINGH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 177 (f)—Jurisdiction, plea of, decision of—Appeal—Court, proper.

Where a defendant raises the plea that the suit is not cognizable by a Revenue Court and that Court overrules the objection and gives a decision upon the merits, an appeal lies, under section 177 (f) of the Agra Tenancy Act, to the District Judge. [p. 780, col. 2.]

Appeal, under section 10 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment of Justice Sir George Knox, KT, dated the 17th March 1918.

Mr. Lakhshmi Narain, for the Appellant.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

BANERJI, J.—The principal question which arises in this appeal is whether the Court below had jurisdiction to entertain the appeal as preferred to it from the decision of the Court of first instance. The facts of the case are these:—The plaintiff Ganga Singh alleged that under a perfect partition which took place between him and the defendant, the disputed plots of land were allotted to his share inasmuch as the defendant held more sir and khudkasht lands than he was entitled to, that after the partition the defendant forcibly took possession of the disputed lands and that in view of the provisions of section 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act the plaintiff was entitled to treat the defendant as his tenant. Treating the defendant as such, the plaintiff brought the present suit in the Revenue Court to eject the defendant from the disputed plots of land, the defendant being, according to him, a non-occupancy tenant. The defendant, on the other hand, contended that he had a right of occupancy. He also raised the plea, which was the first of the additional pleas put forward by him, that "having regard to the plaintiff's own allegations, the suit was not cognizable by the Revenue Court, and on such a ground his suit should be dismissed." An issue was framed by the Court of first instance on the question of jurisdiction and further issues were raised on the merits. The Court of first instance tried the other points in the case, and being of opinion that the defendant was a tenant with rights of occupancy held that the plaintiff was not entitled to eject him. The Court proceeded to observe that in this view the suit was cognizable by the Revenue Court. The plaintiff preferred an appeal from the decision of the Court of first instance to the Commissioner. The Commissioner was of opinion that the appeal lay to the District Judge in view of the provisions of section 177 (f) of the Tenancy Act and returned the memorandum of appeal to the plaintiff for presentation to the proper Court. The memorandum of appeal was then presented by him in the Court of the District Judge. The District Judge entertained the appeal and on the merits held that having regard to the partition proceedings it was no longer open to the defendant to set up his alleged right of occupancy. The Court decreed the claim. The decree of that Court has been affirmed by a learned Judge of this Court in second appeal and the present appeal has been preferred by the defendant under the Letters Patent.

It is contended before us on his behalf that no appeal lay to the District Judge. Although he himself raised the plea that the Revenue Court had no jurisdiction, he urges that this was a futile plea, that in reality there was no question of jurisdiction which could be decided by the Court of first instance and that consequently no appeal lay to the District Judge. Three cases have been cited to us. The first in point of time is the case of Deo Narain Singh v. Sitla Baksh Singh (1). In that case it was observed by the learned Judges that "it would be reducing matters to an absolute absurdity to hold that the defendants in a revenue suit could, by formally raising an absolutely untenable plea of jurisdiction, take every case from the Revenue Court to the Civil Court." And the learned Judges held that where a plea of jurisdiction was raised which could not properly be raised, an appeal did not lie to the District Judge. This view was not followed in the case of Damodar Das v. Jhaoo Singh (2). The third case which we have been referred is the case of Umrai Singh v. Ewaz Singh (3). No doubt section 177 (f) of the Agra Tenancy Act provides that an appeal lies to the District Judge where a question of jurisdiction has been decided by the Court of first instance. If this provision were strictly followed an absurdity would arise in some cases, as observed in the case of Deo Narain Singh v. Sitla Baksh Singh (1) to which I have already referred. A party may select his own forum of appeal by raising a plea which could never have been raised, but, in my opinion, the view which was adopted by my brother Piggott in the case of Umrai Singh v. Ewaz Singh (3) seems to me to be the right criterion in a case of this kind. He observed in his judgment which was affirmed in Letters Patent, that where there was a plea "that the suit as brought was not cognizable by a Revenue Court, that is to say, that assuming the allegations made in the plaint to be true, the Assistant Collector had no jurisdiction to entertain that plaint," that would not be a plea of jurisdiction which was a mere futile and nominal plea but a proper plea to raise. Where such a plea has been raised and decided, an appeal lies from the decision of the Revenue Court to the District Judge under section 177 (f). In the present case the defendant raised the plea as stated above, that upon the allegations contained in the plaint the suit was not one of the nature cognizable by a Revenue Court. The question whether under section 34 of the Tenancy Act the defendant could be deemed to be a tenant and could be sued for ejectment in the Revenue Court was a debatable question and, therefore, when the defendant raised the plea that upon the allegations made in the plaint the case was not cognizable by the Revenue Court, he raised a substantive plea of jurisdiction and not a plea which could never be advanced seriously. If the case had been finally decided in favour of the plaintiff, the defendant's appeal would have lain in the Court of the District Judge. As the plea was overruled and in the end the suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance, the plaintiff was entitled to prefer his appeal to the Court of the District Judge. I think the learned Judge of this Court has rightly held that the appeal lay to the lower Appellate Court. The plea to the contrary now put forward does not come with good grace from the defendant, who himself raised the plea of jurisdiction.

There have been some arguments addressed to us upon the merits of the case. On the merits I see no reason to differ from the view taken by the learned Judge of this Court. The defendant was a party to the partition proceedings in his character as a co-sharer. If he claimed the lands now in suit as lands in respect of which he had the rights of an occupancy tenant, he ought to have put forward that claim at a proper stage of the partition proceedings. Not having done so and the partition proceedings having been completed, it is too late for him now to contend that he has rights of occupancy as a tenant in respect of these lands and that he still possesses those rights The lands were treated in the partition proceedings as his khudkasht lands It may be that they were so treated through a mistake, but the fact remains that the partition took place on the basis that the lands were his khudkasht lands. If they are burdened by his alleged rights of occupancy, the effect will be to diminish the value of the share which has been allotted to the plaintiff and to that extent to annul the effect of the partition. This cannot be done after the partition proceedings have been completed and confirmed. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court was, in my opinion, wrong in saying that the defendant was "equitably estopped" from raising the plea. The defendant, in my opinion, is concluded by the partition proceedings and is not entitled to go behind those proceedings in this suit. I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

RAFIQUE, J.—I am also of opinion for the reasons given by my learned brother Mr. Justice Banerji that this appeal should fail. I would, therefore, dismiss it with costs.

PIGGOTT, J.—I am of the same opinion. I only take it upon myself to add a few words because I was principally concerned in the decision in Umrai Singh v. Ewaz Singh (3), which has been relied upon as if it were an authority in favour of the appellant. At the time when I pronounced that decision, neither of the other two cases to which we have been referred, namely, Deo Narain Singh v. Sitla Baksh Singh (1) and Damodar Das v. Jhaoo Singh (2), had yet been reported. I referred to the former of the two as an unreported case, and my principal reason for adding these remarks at this stage in the present case is, I think, that I made a mistake in doing so. My ratio decidendi in Umrai Singh v. Ewaz Singh (3), which was apparently accepted by the learned Judges before whom the case came in appeal, was really different from that in Deo Narain Singh v. Sitla Baksh Singh (1). The question, as I look at it, and as I still regard it, is one of interpreting the words "a question of jurisdiction" in section 177 (f) of the Agra Tenancy Act. I take those words to mean a plea by the defendant to the effect that, on the facts alleged by the plaintiff himself, the suit is not one which a Revenue Court has jurisdiction to entertain. Obviously it is open to a defendant to deny the facts alleged in the plaint, to set up a different state of facts and to plead that upon facts alleged by himself, the Revenue Court could not lawfully eject him or grant the plaintiff whatever other relief the plaintiff was seeking from that Court This, however, is not, in my opinion, a plea of jurisdiction within the meaning of the sub-section above referred to. It is merely an assertion of the legal consequences which would follow upon the Court's affirming certain pleas of fact set up by the defendant It is so far from being a plea of jurisdiction that it presupposes the jurisdiction of the Court before which the said plea is raised to determine which set of facts is correct, that alleged by the plaintiff or that alleged by the defendant. A plea of jurisdiction, properly so called, is a plea that the facts as stated by the plaintiff himself are such that the Court before which the plaint is brought has no jurisdiction to entertain it, or to grant the relief therein sought. The other two cases of this Court, namely, Damodar Das v. Jhaoo Singh (2) and Deo Narain Singh v. Sitla Baksh Singh (1) are to a large extent in conflict, and I think sufficient to say that I should prefer, if the case were one which required the point to be determined, to follow the decision in Damodar Das v. Jhaoo Singh (2). It is suggested that, unless the view taken in Deo Narain Singh v. Sitla Baksh Singh (1) be affirmed, it will always be open to any defendant in a suit brought in a Revenue Court, and exclusively cognizable by such Court, to invoke the appellate jurisdiction of the District Judge by entering a purely formal, and on the face of it unsustainable, plea, to the effect that the plaint as filed is not cognizable by the Revenue Court. With regard to this I think it sufficient to remark that, on the one hand, we are bound to enforce the law as we find it and to interpret the words of section 177 (f) to the best of our ability, according to their plain meaning. On the other hand, I think the danger suggested will be found to have very little existence in actual practice. It is not as a rule the defendant in a suit before the Revenue Courts who wishes to go out of his way to get that suit brought before a Civil Court in appeal. On the other matters which have been argued before us I have nothing to add to the judgment of Mr. Justice Banerji. I also would dismiss the appeal with costs.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 832 OF 1918.

Present:—Justice Sir William Alying, KT., and Mr. Justice Napier.

PERIYA GOUNDAN—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

KUPPA GOUNDAN—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Malicious prosecution—Prosecution by Police on information supplied by defendant—Informant, liability of—Damages, suit for.

Where, upon a report to a Village Munsif, the Police, after investigation, launch a prosecution against certain persons, and it turns out that the communication to the Munsif was false and the persons are acquitted, the person who made the report is liable, at the instance of the persons prosecuted, in an action for damages for malicious prosecution. It is no answer to such a suit, and would make no difference to the defendant's liability for damages, that the prosecution was instituted and conducted by the Police, as the person primarily responsible for the prosecution is the person who furnished the false information. [p. 783, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Salem, in Appeal Suit No. 3 of 1919, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Salem, in Original Suit No. 887 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The lower Appellate Court erred in holding that the defendant was not liable because the prosecution was conducted by the Police. He gave the first information to the Village Munsif, who submitted a report. The Police acted on the report and prosecuted the accused. It is the false information that formed the basis of the whole thing, and the fact that the prosecution was launched through the medium of the Village Headman does not affect the defendant's liability. There are several modes of launching a complaint and if malice could be imputed to the informant and also absence of reasonable and probable cause, there is no reason why he should escape liability in damages. See the Privy Council ruling in Gaya Prasad v. Bhagat Singh (1). In Sessions Judge of Tinnevelly Division v. Sivan Chetty (2) the Full Bench held that a false information to the Village Headman rendered the informant amenable to a prosecution under section 211, Indian Penal Code. It would be anomalous if an action for damages could not be sustained on the same facts.

Mr. C. Sreenivasa Aiyangar, for the Respondent.—The prosecution was launched and conducted by the Police actively. The Police made a sifting enquiry and launched the prosecution because they were satisfied that there was a prima facie case. The information, whatever it was, was acted on by the Police. The Police and not the defendant was the prosecutor. See Narasinga Row v. Muthaya Pillai (3).

JUDGMENT.—Appellant sued respondent for damages for malicious prosecution. He got a decree for Rs. 100 in the Munsif's Court. The District Judge set it aside, on the ground that respondent could not be said to have prosecuted appellant, because he only made a report to the Village Munsif as a result of which the Police, after investigation, launched and conducted a prosecution for theft against appellant and his father. The authority relied on is the ruling of this Court in Narasinga Row v. Muthaya Pillai (3).

Any person desirous of setting the criminal law in motion against another in respect of an act amounting to a cognizable offence can do so in three ways :—

1. He can present a complaint to a Magistrate having jurisdiction, who will thereupon take action under Chapter XVII, Criminal Procedure Code.

2. He may give information to an officer in charge of a Police station, who will take action under Chapter XIV, Criminal Procedure Code.

3. He may (in the case of all non-bailable and certain other offences) give information to the Headman of his village, who is bound under section 45, Criminal Procedure Code, to forthwith communicate the information to the nearest Magistrate, and to the officer in charge of the nearest Police station. It then becomes the duty of the Police Officer to investigate the case as laid down in Chapter XIV.

(2) 1 Ind. Cas. 187; 32 M. 258; 5 M. L. T. 269 (F. B.); 9 Cr. L. J. 170.

(3) 26 M. 362; 12 M. L. J. 389.

Method (3) in fact only differs from method (2) in that the Village Headman, being the officer presumably most accessible to the person giving information, is made the channel of communication to the Police Officer. It was the method adopted in the present case, and, as the District Judge himself recognizes, the fact that this indirect method of communication with the Police was resorted to makes no difference in the defendant's liability for damages. The contention is that whenever the prosecution in Court is instituted on a Police report under section 173, Criminal Procedure Code, the person who furnished the original information to the Police, whether directly or through the Village Headman, is not responsible for the act of the Police and cannot be sued for damages for malicious prosecution.

This certainly seems to me to be the meaning of the learned Judges in Narasinga Row v. Muthaya Pillai (3), but with all respect, I am unable to agree. If it be conceded that a person is liable for damages in respect of a prosecution on the ground that it was instituted on maliciously false information communicated by him to the Court in the shape of a complaint under section 200, Criminal Procedure Code, why should he not be equally liable where he induces the Police by maliciously false information to send the case to the Magistrate under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code? No doubt it is the duty of the Police to hold an investigation, as laid down in Chapter XIV, before sending the case to the Magistrate with a view to verifying as far as possible the truth of the information furnished to them. But a similar duty is cast on the Magistrate receiving a complaint; he must examine the complainant on oath (section 200) and if not satisfied of the truth of the complaint, he may hold or direct a preliminary enquiry (section 202), and he only takes action against the accused person by the issue of process under section 204, Criminal Procedure Code, if he is of opinion that there is sufficient ground for proceeding. The fact that some officer, whether Policeman or Magistrate, has to form an opinion on the apparent truth of the informant's information before the prosecution proceeds is no more reason in the one case than in the other for exonerating the informant from liability for what follows. It is in each case his false information, out of which the prosecution arises; and it makes no difference whether the person led astray in the first instance is the Police Officer or the Magistrate. The Police or, as the form usually runs, the King-Emperor may be the nominal prosecutor: but the person primarily responsible for the prosecution is the person who furnished the false information on which the Police act. "Qui facit per alium facit per se." The true principles on which responsibility for the prosecution should be fixed are laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gaya Prasad v. Bhagat Singh (1). They are at pains to make it clear that it is not enough to say (as the learned District Judge has in effect said here) that the prosecution was instituted and conducted by the Police. The whole circumstances of the case must be looked to.

It is true that their Lordships in their judgment referred to the judgment of this Court in Narasinga Row v. Muthaya Pillai (3), and add:

"The principle here laid down is sound enough, if properly understood, and its application to the particular case was no doubt justified; but in the opinion of their Lordships it is not of universal application."

I cannot understand this as meaning that their Lordships considered the facts of that case and endorsed this Court's decision on them as correct. To do so would, as it seems to me and if I understand this Court's decision aright, run counter to all the rest of their Lordships' judgment. The language suggests to me that they deemed it unnecessary to consider the correctness of the decision in that particular case: Rather they wished to point out that, while it might be correct, it was based on a principle which was not to be universally applied. If, as I presume, they had only the report in the Indian Law Reports series before them, they may well have been misled. The latter is very incomplete, and contains nothing to suggest that any of the Courts which dealt with the case found the prosecution to be, as a fact, malicious. It recites that the District Munsif found that it was not: but it fails to state (what we have ascertained from the original record) that the Sub-Judge, who was the final Judge of fact, found "that the prosecution of the plaintiff by the 1st defendant was malicious and without reasonable and probable cause." With all respect I do not think their Lordships realised that the Bench of this Court had in effect held that even if the information to the Police was maliciously false, the plaintiff's suit for damages could not succeed, simply because the case having been taken up on a Police report (section 190 (1) (b), Criminal Procedure Code) the Police, and not defendant, must be regarded as the prosecutor.

From such a proposition which is clearly contrary to the views expressed in the rest of their Lordships' judgment, I must respectfully dissent.

It is not inappropriate in this connection to draw attention to the view taken by this Court as to the applicability of section 211, Indian Penal Code, to cases such as the present one. The matter is fully discussed by a Full Bench in Sessions Judge of Tinnevelly Division v. Sivan Chetty (2) and according to the opinion of the majority the action of the defendant in this case, provided the information given by him to the Village Headman was maliciously false, would render him liable to prosecution for an offence under section 211, Indian Penal Code. It would be a curious anomaly if an action for damages against him could not be sustained on the same facts.

I would set aside the decree of the District Judge, and direct him to restore the appeal to file and dispose of it in the light of the above remarks. Costs in this Court to be costs in the cause.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 262 OF 1919.

June 23, 1919.

MANNUA AND ANOTHER—APPLICANTS

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916), ss. 298 (G), 318, 321—Bye-laws relating to dangerous and offensive trades—License, whether can be refused arbitrarily—Remedy of person aggrieved—Injunction, suit for, whether maintainable—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts.

A Municipal Board would not be justified in refusing to grant a license properly applied for, under the bye-laws relating to dangerous and offensive trades, not on any grounds of public safety, health or public convenience, but merely in order to secure an advantage to itself in a dispute about a question of title with another person. [p. 787, col. 1.]

Under the U. P. Municipalities Act of 1916 the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is limited by the provisions of sections 318 and 321 of the Act. Under these sections the only remedy of a person who considers himself aggrieved by a bye-law made under section 298 (G) of the Act is by way of appeal to the higher authority referred to in section 318 of the Act, but it is by no means equally clear that a suit would not lie for an injunction to compel a Municipal Board to grant the plaintiff a license for carrying on a particular trade upon a particular spot, provided always that the plaintiff was prepared to take out the license subject to all the conditions prescribed by the bye-laws and could satisfy the Court that the Municipal Board had refused him the license for reasons wholly unconnected with the public health, safety or convenience. [p. 787, col. 2.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Joint Magistrate, Cawnpore, dated the 1st March 1919.

Messrs. G. W. Dillon and Kailash Nath Katju, for the Applicants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicants in this case are Musammat Batasu, also called Musammat Diptian, and her son Mannua, Ganga Putras by caste, residents of Cawnpur. They were prosecuted under the provisions of the United Provinces Municipal Act for keeping a certain plot of ground as a place for the storing of wood, without having obtained a license for so doing from the Municipal Board. Now it is not denied that the Municipal Board of Cawnpur has made bye-laws under section 298 of the aforesaid Act, which bye-laws contain amongst other prohibitions a prohibition against any land within Municipal limits being used for the storage of wood, except under a license granted by the Board and subject to the provisions of such license. The record before me shows that Mannua on behalf of himself and his mother admitted that they held no license for storing wood at the spot in question. He even admitted that they had not, up to the date on which he made his statement in Court, presented to the Municipal Board any formal application for a license. He said he had asked an Inspector in the service of the Municipal Board verbally for a license and had been told by the Inspector that he could not get one. At his trial he presented a petition to the Joint Magistrate before whom he was being tried, addressing the said Magistrate in his capacity of a member of the Municipal Board of Cawnpur, asking that he might be granted a license. On this state of facts, and apart from all other considerations, it is sufficiently obvious that Musammat Batasu and Mannua have committed at least a technical breach of a bye-law lawfully made by the Municipal Board of Cawnpur and are liable to punishment This, however, does not quite conclude the matter. The sentence imposed by the trying Magistrate has been a fine of Rs. 50 on each of the two accused persons. This is practically the maximum penalty prescribed by the Municipal bye law for a first conviction in respect of an offence of this sort, the fine imposed being nontheless the maximum fine of Rs. 100 because it has been apportioned in equal shares between the two keepers of the timberyard. Now it has been represented to me on behalf of Musammat Batasu and Mannua that the sentence imposed is in any case excessive and that, in view of the circumstances of the case as a whole, the Joint Magistrate should, even if he felt himself compelled to convict of a technical offence, have marked his sense of the equities of the case by imposing a merely nominal penalty. Now that the case has come before me in revision, I consider it incumbent on me to look into the matter from this point of view. The dispute between the applicants and the Municipal Board of Cawnpur goes back to the year 1914. It appears that in that year the Municipal Board came to the conclusion that the land on which the applicants were then and are now keeping a timberyard was Nazul land which could only be occupied on a lease or license granted by the Municipal Board. They took proceedings against these applicants for keeping a timberyard on Nazul land without the permission of the Board. The applicants replied that the land in question was not Nazul land, and that in any case it had been in the exclusive occupation for the purpose of a timberyard of the applicants and their predecessors-in-title for a period of more than fifty years. As a matter of fact the dispute in that case does not seem to have been directed specially to the question of any stock of timber on the land in question, but rather to the question of a hut alleged to exist upon the said site. The Court trying the case came to the conclusion that the Municipal Board was not entitled to maintain such a prosecution without first instituting a suit in the Civil Court and obtaining an adjudication on the question of disputed title to the land itself. Towards the end of the year 1918 the question of the use of the land in suit by these applicants seems to have come up once more before the Municipal Board, and a resolution was passed the terms of which have been laid before me. The Board resolved that the lease of Nazul land granted to Musammat Batasu and Mannua should be cancelled and that no license should be given them for storing wood on the land in question. The present prosecution has followed naturally on the passing of this resolution. The applicants contend that the Municipal Board is not within its legal rights in refusing to grant them a license. Their case is that the bye-law under which they have been prosecuted forms part of a series of bye laws dealing with dangerous and offensive trades, the object of which is the safety of the public and the prevention of nuisances. It is contended on their behalf that these bye-laws must be interpreted as a whole, and that, being so interpreted, they warrant the conclusion that the Municipal Board is under an obligation to grant a license under the said bye-laws upon any properly framed application, provided only they are satisfied that the trade in question can be carried on in the land for which license is sought without danger or injury to the public and that the person applying for a license is prepared to abide by all the prescribed conditions. I am asked to hold that if the present case be judged by these tests, the decision ought to be in favour of the applicants that the Municipal Board had no right to pass a resolution refusing to give them a license and that it is within the power of this Court to set aside a conviction, if it is satisfied that there has been a misuse of the powers conferred upon the Municipal Board by the Act which regulates and defines its powers. In this connection I have been referred to the case of Emperor v. Balkishan (1) in which a learned Judge of this Court, in dealing with a conviction under the former Municipalities Act of 1900, went into the question of the reasonableness of a particular bye-law and set aside the conviction upon a finding that the bye law in question was not reasonable and that its passing amounted to an abuse of power on the part of the Municipal Board. This decision cannot govern the case now before me in its entirety. The bye-law which the applicants have contravened is in itself a very reasonable and proper one, and the applicants were technically in the wrong when they came before the Joint Magistrate's Court, because they had made no formal application to the Municipal Board for the grant of a license. I am still of opinion that, inspite of the Board's resolution of the 20th of November 1918, it is incumbent upon these applicants, unless they elect to submit to the orders of the Board and to remove their stock of wood from the site in question, to present through the proper channel a formal application for a license to the Municipal Board. Whatever resolution may have been passed by the said Board at a previous meeting upon an ex parte statement of the facts, it does no follow that a license would necessarily be refused after the applicants had laid their case fully before the Board. I am bound to observe, however, that the position of the Board in this matter is a peculiar one. They are claiming the site itself as against Musammat Batasu and Mannua. On the materials at present available to me I do not profess to understand the reference in the Board's resolution of November 20th, 1918, to the cancellation of a lease said to be held by Mannua and his mother for the use of this land. For ought I know the Municipal Board may have been in possession of indisputable evidence that these applicants hold the land in suit as their lessees. In any case the papers before me show that the land in suit is claimed as Nazul land on behalf of the Municipal Board and that this claim is being resisted by Musammat Batasu and Mannua. The question is whether the Municipal Board is acting within its lawful rights in using its power of withholding a license so as to put pressure upon these applicants and compel them to vacate the disputed site, without the question of title being brought for determination before a competent Court. On the facts now before me I hesitate about pronouncing a final opinion on this point. The Municipal Board may have adequate reasons for taking up the position that they would only be stultifying themselves, and making an admission which would be used against them in any subsequent civil litigation, if they were to grant these persons a license for storing wood on this particular site. I will not go further than to say that in my opinion the question would be one for careful consideration by the Municipal Board in the event of the matter coming before them upon a regular and formal application for a license made by Musammat Batasu or Mannua or both. I so far agree with the main argument which has been pressed upon me in support of this application that I think it is correct to say that the bye-laws on the subject of dangerous and offensive trades must be considered as a whole, and that a Municipal Board will be straining its authority if it refuses a license, properly applied for under any of these bye-laws, not on any grounds of public safety, health or convenience, but merely in order to secure an advantage to itself in a dispute about a question of title with another person. The jurisdiction of this Court to interfere on the criminal side has been sufficiently illustrated by the ruling which I have already referred to. It is beyond question also that, under the former Municipal Act, a suit would be maintainable for an injunction restraining a Municipal Board from interfering with the plaintiff's lawful exercise of his right to carry on a certain trade or employment upon a particular site, to the possession of which the said plaintiff had a clear title. Under the United Provinces Municipalities Act No. II of 1916 the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is limited by the provisions of sections 318 and 321 of the said Act. I have no doubt that under these sections the only remedy of a person who considered himself aggrieved by a bye-law made under section 295 of the Act, heading G (which is the heading dealing with offensive and dangerous trades), would be by way of appeal to the higher authority referred to in section 318. But it is by no means equally clear that a suit would not lie for an injunction to compel a Municipal Board to grant the plaintiff a license for carrying on a particular trade upon a particular spot, provided always that the plaintiff was prepared to take out the license subject to all the conditions prescribed by the bye laws and could satisfy the Court that the Municipal Board had refused him the license for reasons wholly unconnected with the public health, safety or convenience. I do not think I can profitably say anything further about this case as it stands. I reduce the sentence imposed upon Musammat Batasu and Mannua to one of a fine of Rs. 10 against the two of them or Rs. 5 each. The balance of the fine, if paid, will be refunded to the applicants. I leave it to the parties concerned to reconsider their position in the light of such remarks as I have thought it expedient to make. If the matter should unhappily come before this Court again, the point for consideration will undoubtedly be, which of the two parties has honestly and in good faith endeavoured to put itself in the right. I must not be understood for a moment to have laid down that these applicants are entitled to persist in their present attitude of contumacious resistance to the Municipal bye-laws. They are bound either to submit to those bye-laws or to take proper steps to bring the matter in dispute between themselves and the Municipal Board to the adjudication of a competent authority; and the first step which they must take, I have no doubt, is the presentation, through the proper channel, of a regular and formal application for a license for the storage of wood in the site in question.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 264 OF 1918.

Rani SUNDERABAI—APPLICANT

KISHORE SINGH AND OTHERS—NON-APPLICANTS.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439—Revision—High Court, power of interference of—Acquittal, whether can be set aside at instance of private prosecutor—Offence, personal—Defamation.

Although, as a general rule, it is inexpedient to interfere in revision at the instance of a private person with an acquittal after trial by a competent tribunal, yet, section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code undoubtedly confers power on the High Court to set aside an order of acquittal at the instance of a private prosecutor, especially in a case of defamation where the offence is of so essentially personal a character that the Local Government would seldom be willing to appeal from an acquittal. [p. 789, col. 1.]

Application for revision of the order of the District Magistrate, Saugor.

Mr. S. Y. Deshmukh, for the Applicant.

Messrs. Gupta and G. L. Subhedar, for the Non-Applicants.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

ORDER.—Rani Sundara, the applicant in this case, is the wife of Raja Kishore Singh of Hatri. On the 18th April 1918 she complained to a First Class Magistrate that she had been defamed by the Raja, his Karinda Anup Singh and another person with whom we are not now concerned, in a petition presented to the District Court at Saugor on the 30th November 1916. One Fundilal, a medical practitioner, was included in the complaint on the ground that he had sworn an affidavit in support of the aforesaid petition. The petition, of which a copy forms Exhibit P-1 in the Magistrate's record, was signed by Anup Singh as the Raja's Karinda. It alleged that the Rani was leading an unchaste life, had been pregnant for over 5 months and was believed to be attempting abortion. Fundilal's affidavit stated that having seen the Rani thrice in one month he found her over 5 months advanced in pregnancy, that she admitted being pregnant and that she had been trying to bring about a miscarriage. The District Court had on the 14th March 1916 passed a decree awarding the Rani an allowance of Rs. 30 per month and directing the Raja to put her in possession of residential quarters at Patna in the Damoh District. The object of the petition was to obtain an order depriving the Rani of this allowance. The District Judge after full enquiry held that the Rani had not been unchaste or pregnant as alleged and dismissed the application with costs on the 17th April 1917.

Immediately on receipt of summons in the present case the Raja applied for and obtained permission to appear by Pleader. The only ground stated in his application was that he was a very respectable man against whom his wife had laid a frivolous complaint with the object of dishonouring him. In his order the Magistrate dispensed with the personal attendance of the Raja "for the time being," but his attendance was not enforced at any stage of the trial.

The Rani in her evidence denied that Fundilal had ever attended her and called one witness to speak to her character. The Raja himself was not examined, but his Pleader made a statement on his behalf in the course of which he alleged that Anup Singh had filed the petition in the District Court without his knowledge: this statement was corroborated by Anup Singh on the latter's examination. Anup Singh alleged that he had made enquiries and satisfied himself that the Rani was pregnant in November 1916. Fundilal in reply to the Magistrate's questions declared that he had felt the Rani's pulse and caused her to be examined by a woman who reported her to be five or six months advanced in pregnancy. The Magistrate then charged the Raja and Anup Singh with defamation in respect of the allegations in the petition of November 1916 that the Rani was leading an unchaste life and was said to be over five months pregnant. Fundilal was charged with making similar allegations in his affidavit and also with stating therein that the Rani was attempting to bring about a miscarriage.

All the accused pleaded not guilty. Six witnesses were examined for the defence, the object being to show that Fundilal did attend the complainant and cause her to be examined by one Musammat Gora, with the result that she was bona fide believed to be pregnant. How Fundilal's discovery came to the knowledge of Anup Singh was not explained.

The Magistrate acquitted all the accused, holding that the Raja and Anup Singh had acted in good faith on information supplied by Fundilal and were protected by the ninth exception to section 499, Indian Penal Code. Fundilal also was held to have acted in good faith as the result of his visits to the Rani and her examination by Musammat Gora: no exception to section 499 was cited as applicable to his conduct.

The application for revision of the order of acquittal attacks the order on its merits and without reference to the practice of this Court in such matters as laid down in Binda Prashad v. Ripusudan (1). The District Magistrate, however, has not opposed the application and on behalf of the Crown the standing Counsel has submitted that there has been a serious miscarriage of justice. For the non-applicants on the other hand it is urged that there has been no such defect or irregularity in the trial as to justify interference in revision.

It may be taken as a well-settled view of all the High Courts that as a general rule it is not expedient to interfere in revision at the instance of a private person with an acquittal after trial by a competent tribunal and that applications for such interference should be discouraged on public grounds. The practice of this Court is in accordance with this view. On the other hand section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, undoubtedly confers power to set aside an order of acquittal at the instance of a private prosecutor. And defamation is an offence of so essentially a personal character that the Local Government would seldom be willing to appeal from an acquittal under section 477, Criminal Procedure Code. It is true that in Binda Prashad v. Ripusudan (1) (above cited) the offence in question was defamation, but the character of that offence does not appear to have been considered and interference was recognised as proper if by reason of any irregularity there has been a failure of justice.

In the present case the basis of the allegations against the Rani is the existence of what is described as a ball in the lower part of the abdomen. Musammat Gora (D. W. No 3) deposed to feeling this ball and basing her conclusion as to the Rani's condition thereon. The Magistrate appears to have accepted this woman's story on the assumption that without the knowledge obtained from Musammat Gora the existence of the ball could not have been known to the Raja. The Rani herself alleged that this lump has existed since she was 10 or 15 years old and if this is true, the Raja may perfectly well have known of it by reason of his position as the Rani's husband. The probability of this knowledge having been used as a foundation for the petition of November 1916 has been wholly lost sight of. The Magistrate has also failed to justify the entire omission from the charges against the Raja and Anup Singh of any reference to the accusation of attempted abortion, which figures in the charge against Fundilal alone. No attempt was made by any of the witnesses for the defence to make out that the Rani was endeavouring to bring about a miscarriage; even Gora said nothing on this point. The Magistrate, moreover, made no reference in his judgment to circumstances admitted by Gora, which indicated that she might have been influenced by Fundilal, and it is certainly difficult to understand why a woman of her position and character has been believed in preference to the Rani in a matter closely affecting the Rani's own person.

The complainant waited a whole year after the failure of the Raja's application to the District Court before preferring her complaint, but she was not cross-examined in respect of this delay at the trial, nor did the Magistrate make any reference to the fact in his judgment. This point will doubtless receive attention at the re-trial which I am about to order.

The trying Magistrate seems to me to have failed altogether to appreciate the probabilities of the case and to weigh the evidence for the defence with the care which the situation demanded. He also omitted to include in the charge against the Raja and Anup Singh an essential part of the accusation laid by the complainant, which is prima facie justified by the petition and affidavit of 1916. Even so far as Fundilal is concerned, the entire absence of evidence in support of the allegation that the Rani was attempting to bring about a miscarriage has been ignored. Looking to all these circumstances I consider that the order of acquittal in favour of each of the accused should be reversed and I hereby set those orders aside. The three non-applicants will be re-tried by such Magistrate other than the one who acquitted them as the District Magistrate may select for the purpose.

Case sent back.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 379 - Theft—Tenant removing trees belonging to landlord—Custom set up by tenant—Burden of proof.

The accused, tenants of a village, removed certain trees which had been uprooted in a duststorm. The trees were the property of the zemindar, and the accused admitted having removed them, but alleged that under a custom in the village they had the right to do so, and produced certain extracts from the wajib-ul-arz in support of their allegation. The Court held that the removal of the trees amounted to the offence of theft, and convicted the accused accordingly:

Held, that the extracts from the wajib ul-arz did not evidence a custom authorising the removal of fallen trees by tenants without the consent of the landlord: that the accused had failed to prove that the removal was not dishonest, and as the removal caused loss to the landlord which was wrongful to him and caused wrongful gain to the accused, the case fell within illustration (a) of section 378 of the Penal Code, and the conviction was justified [p. 790, col. 2; p. 791, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 27th February 1919.

Messrs. Iqbal Ahmad and Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Applicants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Complaint was instituted by one Pandit Bawa Ram to the effect tat on the 20th of June a duststorm swept through the village of Mahotra, with the result that nine Mahwa and one mango tree were uprooted. In addition to these trees uprooted by this duststorm there were two old Mahwa trees which had fallen a year before and were lying on the ground. The accused, who are tenants in the village Mahotra, removed these uprooted trees and the two Mahwa trees which had fallen the year previous and took possession of them. The tenants appeared and admitted having taken the trees and kept them within their possession. The Courts below have found that the removal of these trees amounted to an offence of theft.

It has been argued in revision in this Court that the act of the tenants was wanting in the element of dishonesty which is a necessary essential of every theft. The argument is that the Zemindar has been attempting to enforce his rights without having recourse to the Civil Court. The case, it is said, is for the Civil Courts and not for the Criminal Courts. The plea is raised that there is a custom in this village whereby tenants can under such circumstances remove trees. An extract from the wajib ul-arz of 1860 and an extract from the wajib-ul arz of 1880 were read over to me as proving that the custom set up by the tenants exists and prevails in this village. I do not understand these extracts as in any way evidencing a custom authorizing tenants to remove without the consent of the Zemindar whole trees which have been uprooted by duststorms. But I am not going to lay down any finding as to whether such a custom does or does not exist in the village of Mahotra—that is a matter for the Civil Court. All I have to consider is whether it has been proved in this case that the tenants dishonestly removed certain trees. The Courts below have found and the tenants have admitted that they did remove the trees. It was for them to prove that the removal was not dishonest. The removal certainly caused loss to the Zemindar which was wrongful loss to him and caused wrongful gain to the accused. The accused caused this loss by means which at the time of employing those means they knew to be likely to cause it. It may well be that they had some intention of, by this act, creating as well evidence of a custom to remove the trees in their favour. As the evidence on the record stands, that loss was wrongful loss and the case falls within illustration (a) of section 378 of the Indian Penal Code. I was referred to the case of Bhagwat Saran Misir v. Emperor (1). There is no finding in this case that the accused was acting bona fide, on what he supposed to be his legal right.

The sentence of fine does seem to me to be severe. I reduce the fine to a fine of Rs. 320 or Rs. 40 on each one of the accused. Of this sum, if realised, Rs. 300 will be given to Pandit Bawa Ram, who appears prima facie entitled to the trees that were removed. In other respects the sentence passed by the Court below will stand good.

Sentence reduced.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 34, 302, 325—Attack made by two persons—Death caused by one—Offence—Murder—Intention—Grievous hurt.

Where two persons armed with deadly weapons make an attack upon another and it is proved that death was caused by a blow inflicted by only one of them, both cannot be convicted of the offence of murder under section 302, read with section 34 of the Penal Code; to make both equally liable for the murder it ought to be established that both of them struck the deceased. The one who struck the blow is guilty of murder and the other, who must have known that grievous hurt would in all probability be caused, is guilty of having abetted an offence under section 325, read with section 109, of the Penal Code. [p. 795, col. 2;p. 796, col. 1.]

Appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Lahore, dated the 13th November 1918.

Messrs. Morton, Beechey and Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mul Chand, Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Four men, namely Bahal Singh, Mula Singh, Dhara Singh and Fateh Singh, were committed to the Court of Session on a charge of murder of one Dula Singh under section 302, Indian Penal Code. The two latter, i. e., Dhara Singh and Fateh Singh, were acquitted by the learned Sessions Judge, who convicted the two first, namely, Bahal Singh and Mula Singh, and sentenced them to death. Both of them have filed appeals to this Court and the case has also come up before us under a reference under section 374, Criminal Procedure Code, for the confirmation of the sentence of death passed upon them.

The case as set up on behalf of the prosecution was that the families of Mohkam Singh and Wir Singh were not on good terms. Mohkam Singh had three sons, Fateh Singh, Bahal Singh and Mula Singh, and a daughter, Musammat Kisso. Dhara Singh, the accused No. 3 in the case, is the son of Bahal Singh. Wir Singh's family is represented by Labh Singh, Kehr Singh, Sher Singh, Kunden Singh and Dula Singh, the five sons of Wir Singh. Labh Singh has two sons, Gurdit Singh and Ranjit Singh. It is alleged that Gurdit Singh entered the house of Mohkam Singh's family with the object of having sexual intercourse with Musammat Kisso. A complaint was filed against Gurdit Singh in the Court of the Tahsildar of Chunian under section 451, Indian Penal Code. There were several adjournments of the hearing of this case. One of the dates fixed for the hearing of this case was the 22nd of July 1918, and a day previous to this, i. e., on the 21st of July 1918, Gurdit Singh along with his father, Labh Singh, left the village of their residence, namely, Chak No. 24, in order to attend the Court of the Tahsildar of Chunian. It appears that the other brothers of Labh Singh did not reside in this village but they had their residences elsewhere. On account of this feud with the family of Mohkam Singh, Labh Singh was in constant fear of molestation and injury from the members of Mokham Singh's family. For this reason Dula Singh and Kehr Singh, who lived in a village called Jamsher, had been called and requested to stay with Labh Singh's family to be of use and help to them. Therefore, they had for some time been living in Labh Singh's house. It is stated that when leaving for the Court of the Tahsildar of Chunian Labh Singh told his wife, Musammat Kishen Kaur, to look the door of the compound and requested his neighbour, Wadhawa Singh, also to look after his family during his absence. Labh Singh had left in the morning. About midday Kehr Singh went out of the house to get fodder. Musammat Kishen Kaur was left in the house with Dula Singh, who was sleeping on a charpoy under a shed. At about 2-30 P.M., it is stated, Bahal Singh climbed over the wall and came into the compound of the house with a gandasa in his hand. The other accused, Mula Singh, Fatteh Singh and Dhara Singh, also came in immediately after. Musammat Kishen Kaur called out to Dula Singh who, having got up from his bed, was assailed by the accused persons with gandasas and dangs. Dula Singh was killed on the spot. Musammat Kishen Kaur tried to run away but she was caught by the accused, Dhara Singh, while climbing a ladder and was pulled down. She was compelled to hand over the key of the compound to the assailants. The door was opened and certain other persons were also admitted into the house. She was lifted by Indar Singh, one of the men who had just been let in, and Dhara Singh, who took her out of the house, threw her upon a heap of manure, tore her clothes and maltreated her. When the accused had left the house she returned to her compound and found Dula Singh lying dead. One Wadhawa Singh was seen trying to give Dula Singh some milk in order to revive him. He, however, left the place when Musammat Kishen Kaur re-entered the house naked. Narain Singh, the Lambardar, came in and the whole story was related to him by Musammat Kishen Kaur how the four accused had assailed Dula Singh and maltreated her.

On the return of Kehr Singh to the compound and the arrival of Sher Singh, another brother of Labh Singh, they started in the company of Narain Singh, the Lambardar, to report the matter at the Police Station Pattoki. The report was made at 8-15 P. M., on the evening of the 21st July 1918. It was made by Narain Singh alone as his two companions, Kehr Singh and Sher Singh, had left him in the way and had gone to look for Labh Singh in the village at Bhai Kot, having requested Narain Singh not to make any report until the arrival of Labh Singh. In the report it was stated that Narain Singh was sitting under a tahli tree that day near the village well. He suddenly heard the voice of Dula Singh uttering the words "mar gae, mar gae." Upon this he went to the house of Dula Singh and saw Bahal Singh and Mula Singh, sons of Mohkam Singh, Jat, residents of the village, coming out of the house of Dula Singh. Bahal Singh had a chhavi in his hand while Mula Singh a dang. When he went inside the house, he saw Dula Singh lying murdered on the ground and blood oozing out of his head. Musammat Kishen Kaur said to him that Bahal Singh and Mula Singh after murdering the deceased had taken to their heels. He gave as the reason for the murder the trespass by Gurdit Singh into the house of Bahal Singh and Mula Singh with the object of committing adultery with Musammat Kisso, their sister, about which a complaint had been lodged in the Court of the Tahsildar of Chunian.

It is to be borne in mind that in this report only two names were mentioned, namely, those of Bahal Singh and Mula Singh. When the Police arrived at about midnight, Musammat Kishen Kaur stated that Dula Singh had been killed by the four accused persons. She, however, reserved her full statement till after the return of her husband, Labh Singh. Narain Singh the Lambardar, who had made the report, was examined as a witness for the prosecution in this case. It appears from his statement that he tried to modify his previous statement contained in the first information report. He admitted having seen two men running away from the house of Labh Singh. He stated: "I saw two men running away, one had a dang and the other had some weapon, it might have been a gandasa or a chhavi. Something was shining, it might have been the ferule of a stick. I went into the compound. I did not identify either of the two men

I found Dula Singh lying murdered and Musammat Kishen Kaur sitting beside him. She told me that he had been murdered by Bahal Singh and Mula Singh." He admitted having gone to the thana and having reported that a murder had been committed, but in order to minimise what he had reported to the Police he stated in his deposition: "I do not know what the Police wrote. I did not have the report read out to me. I got no copy of the report given to me." In his cross-examination he stated that Bahal Singh accused had opposed him at the time of his appointment as a Lambardar. The Sub-Inspector, Gobind Sahai, who had taken down the first information report made by Narain Singh, Lambardar, in his deposition stated that he took down the statement made by Narain Singh, that he wrote exactly what he said and that he gave him a copy of the statement. He read out the statement to him and he had acknowledged it to be correct. A receipt for the copy was taken from him. According to the evidence of the Sub-Inspector, the brother Kehr Singh also came to report and he reported against the four accused. Having taken down the report, as we have mentioned above, the Sub-Inspector went to the house of Labh Singh and arrived there at about midnight. He prepared the statement of injuries, and sent the body for post mortem examination with Mahna Singh constable. Musammat Kishen Kaur was examined by him, but she refused to give a full statement till the arrival of her husband but she did give him the names of the four accused. On the arrival of her husband she did make a fuller statement and handed over to the Sub-Inspector her torn clothes, a dang and a padlock. Musammat Kishen Kaur in her statement before the Court of Session stated that about $3\frac{1}{2}$ months ago in the afternoon Dula Singh was lying on a bed in the compound. She was also in the compound working at her spinning wheel a few paces distant from Dula Singh. Ranjita and her little daughters were playing about. The door of the compound was locked for fear of enemies. At that time Bahal Singh came into the compound followed by the other three accused. Bahal Singh first struck Dula Singh on the head. According to her statement the other three accused, namely, Mula Singh, Fatteh Singh and Dhara Singh, also attacked Dula Singh and hit him. Fatteh Singh and Mula Singh had gandasas. They struck Dula Singh on the top of the head. Fatteh Singh and Mula Singh struck at exactly the same time and in the same place. Dula Singh fell to the ground. Then Dhara Singh struck Dula Singh on the stomach two or three times with a dang which he had in his hand. According to this witness three of the accused persons had delivered strokes on the head of the deceased before he fell to the ground.

According to the medical evidence, however, it would appear that there was only one incised wound, 5 inches by 2 inches, found on the head of the deceased and that death was stated to have been caused "by injury ante mortem, homicidal and with some sharp weapon." Ranjit Singh, son of Labh Singh, corroborated the statement made by his mother Musammat Kishen Kaur.

Kehr Singh was also examined as a witness in this case. He admittedly was absent from the compound of Labh Singh at the time of the occurrence but he tried to make out that he came back just in time to observe from a distance the four accused persons going to the house of Wadhawa Singh. The evidence of this man has been altogether discarded by the learned Sessions Judge, and for very good reasons. Labh Singh also admittedly was not present on the day of the occurrence and his evidence was merely formal. The learned Sessions Judge, having taken into consideration the discrepancies to be found between the first information report and the statement of Musammat Kishen Kaur as to the number and identity of the accused persons, came to the conclusion that it was not fully established that Fatteh Singh and Dhara Singh were also among the assailants. Upon a review of the entire evidence, he, however, came to the conclusion that the case against Bahal Singh and Mula Singh was established beyond any reasonable doubt. He found that Mula Singh admitted that he went into the compound of Labh Singh and had a fight with Dula Singh in the course of which he killed the latter. As regards Bahal Singh the learned Sessions Judge found that as against him also the case had been fully made out upon the evidence of Musammat Kishen Kaur and Ranjit Singh. He preferred to rely upon the original statement of Narain Singh, the Lambardar, and held that Bahal Singh's presence was established. The plea of alibi set up on behalf of Bahal Singh was rejected by the learned Judge for very good reasons.

The defence set up by Mula Singh was that he had struck Dula Singh in self-defence in retaliation of an attack made by Dula Singh upon him. His story was that he was watering his horse when it got loose, ran away and entered the house of Labh Singh attracted by the neighing of the colt in Labh Singh's compound. He followed the horse into the house and Dula Singh at once sprang upon him and hit him on the head with a dang. There was a kahi lying by, which he picked up and used it in self-defence when he was being attacked by Dula Singh. The two witnesses called in support of this defence were disbelieved by the learned Sessions Judge for very cogent reasons.

Having found that both Bahal Singh and Mula Singh had entered the house, the learned Sessions Judge then considered the question as to who actually delivered the fatal blow which brought about the death of Dula Singh. In his opinion it was established that several men, of whom Bahal Singh and Mula Singh were two, had invaded the compound of Labh Singh armed with gandasas and that they had immediately assaulted Dula Singh and that one of their number struck him on the head and killed him. He also held that it was proved that the common intention of the assailants was to kill some members of this family. He preferred to believe the theory that the party of assailants had come with the intention of killing some one in Labh Singh's family. Taking this view of the case the learned Sessions Judge applied section 34 read with section 33, Indian Penal Code, and held that all were guilty of the murder of Dula Singh. He, therefore, convicted both Bahal Singh and Mula Singh under section 302, read with section 34, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced both of them to death.

It has been contended on behalf of the appellants that the case has not been made out against them upon the evidence on the record. On behalf of Bahal Singh it was urged that there was no reliable evidence to establish that he was one of the assailants. Now there can be no doubt that Bahal Singh and Mula Singh were named from the very commencement. Their names were mentioned in the first information report. Musammat Kishen Kaur and Ranjit Singh both named them and although Narain Singh, the Lambardar, tried to minimise the first statement, he did state that Musammat Kishen Kaur had told him that Dula Singh had been murdered by Bahal Singh and Mula Singh. We, therefore, entirely agree with the learned Sessions Judge in the conclusion that the presence of both the appellants has been established beyond any possible doubt.

As regards the motive of the accused and the intention with which they came to the house of Labh Singh, we have come to a different conclusion from that arrived at by the learned Sessions Judge. The real grievance which Bahal Singh's family members had against the family of Labh Singh was that Gurdit Singh had disgraced their family by having sexual intercourse with Musammat Kisso. It was as to this that they had complained to the Court. We think that their object in going to the house of Labh Singh was to bring about by retaliation the same kind of disgrace upon Labh Singh's family to which their family had been subjected. In our opinion they intended simply to insult and disgrace Musammat Kishen Kaur, the wife of Labh Singh. No doubt they went there armed, as they thought it prudent to guard against possible opposition and danger. We do not think that we would be justified in holding under these circumstances that they had the intention of killing anybody. In all probability while attempting to molest Musammat Kishen Kaur they were opposed by Dula Singh and thereupon Mula Singh struck him with the weapon which he had, which cut the parietal bone and caused the death.

As regards Mula Singh there can be no doubt upon his admission that it was he who delivered the fatal stroke. He must be taken to have intended to kill the man as he must have known the consequences of the use of the dangerous weapon with which he delivered the stroke (section 300, clause 3, Indian Penal Code). He is, therefore, certainly guilty of the offence of murder. His story about the horse and subsequent fight with Dula Singh and his plea of self-defence cannot be entertained. The story on the face of it appears to be absurd. As has been shown, there is evidence, which we believe, to the effect that the door of the compound was closed and locked. It was not, therefore, possible for the horse or Mula Singh to have entered the compound through the door. The story of the horse having been proved to be false, the plea of self-defence based upon it must necessarily fail.

As regards Bahal Singh, although we believe the evidence with regard to his presence, we do not think that he can be found guilty of the offence of murder. The act which caused the death of Dula Singh has not been established against him. According to the medical evidence there can be no doubt that only one stroke was delivered and that stroke has been found to have been delivered by Mula Singh. It, therefore, follows that the criminal act was not done by Bahal Singh and Mula Singh jointly in furtherance of their common intention. Section 34, Indian Penal Code, runs thus:—

"When a criminal act is done by several persons (in furtherance of the common intention of all), each of such persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if it were done by him alone."

According to this section, in order to make both Bahal Singh and Mula Singh equally liable for the murder of Dula Singh, it ought to have been established that both of them struck the deceased. It was so established in the two cases of the Allahabad High Court relied upon by the learned Public Prosecutor. In the case of Queen-Empress v. Mahabir Tiwari (1) Strachey, C.J., made the following remarks:

"There can be no doubt, however, that the appellant was one of the persons committing the dacoity; and the evidence shows that, upon Gajraj seizing the appellant while the dacoits were engaged in plundering the threshing floor, all the dacoits attacked and beat him with lathis, and that the appellant similarly joined the rest in so beating him. It is thus clear that the attack on Gajraj was made by the dacoits, including the appellant, in furtherance of the common intention of all, and, therefore, each of them was liable under section 34 of the Code in the same manner as if he were the sole assailant."

In the case of Emperor v. Gulab (2) the finding was that "abuse followed between the parties and thereupon, according to the evidence for the prosecution, the three men attacked Hardial with their lathis. Ganga Prasad was also armed with a lathi and a regular fight took place between two men on one side and three on the other." It was held in that case that "the three accused were all armed with the same class of weapon. They all attacked Hardial. . . . . The three accused were moved by a common intention. That intention may not have been to cause death, but in carrying out their intention they all used deadly weapons and they must be deemed to have known that they were likely to cause death." Upon this finding it was held in that case that section 34 applied. Such is not the case here. In the case of Emperor v. Nirmal Kanta Roy (3), Stephen, J., at page 1088* observed as follows:—

"The second point depends on the terms of section 34. This provides that when a criminal act is done by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of such persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if it were done by him alone. In this case the killing of Nripendra was, according to the evidence, done by one person who was not the accused. It was, therefore, not done by several persons and I do not see how the section can apply. The only act he can be liable for under the section is one done by several persons of whom he was one, i. e., by the man who escaped and himself. They may have committed many criminal acts together, but they did not both kill Nripendra. The difference between the acts of the two men is that the one actually killed the Inspector, and the other accused merely attempted to kill him. In order to make the accused liable for murder, under section 34, it would be necessary to say that an offence and an attempt to commit it are the same act which seems to me not to be the case." We entirely agree in the view taken by Stephen, J., as to the applicability of section 34.

We are clearly of opinion that Bahal Singh has not been rightly convicted of the offence of murder under section 302 read with section 34, Indian Penal Code. He, however, was a member of the invading party. They had both armed themselves, according to the evidence, with deadly weapons. It must have been known to Bahal Singh that in case of opposition the weapons would be used and at least it must have been known to him that in all probability grievous hurt would be caused. He must, therefore, be taken to have abetted an offence under section 325 read with section 109, Indian Penal Code. Therefore, while upholding the conviction and confirming the sentence of death in the case of Mula Singh, we set aside the conviction and sentence passed upon Bahal Singh under section 302/34 and we convict him under sections 325/109, Indian Penal Code, and sentence him to seven years' rigorous imprisonment.

Appeal accepted in part.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 110—Security proceedings—Evidence for prosecution and defence balanced—Bond, whether should be required.

In a case under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code if the evidence for the defence is as good as that for the prosecution, no bonds should be taken from the accused. [p. 797, col. 2.]

Criminal revision from an order of the District Magistrate, Etawah, dated the 17th of June 1919.

Mr. J. M. Banerjee, for the Applicants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision from an order of the District Magistrate, dated the 17th of June 1919, confirming an order of Thakar Pateshwari Prasad Singh, Magistrate, First Class, dated the 28th of May 1919, directing the applicants to furnish security in different sums under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is urged on behalf of the applicants that the learned Magistrate committed several irregularities in the proceedings that he held against them, under section 100 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and that the evidence for the defence with regard to the character of the applicants is just as good as, if not better than, that for the prosecution. In support of the first contention the learned Counsel refers this Court to the order of the Magistrate made sometime about the 2nd of April 1919. Under that order the applicants were brought before him under a warrant instead of summonses. The learned Counsel refers to the provisions of section 114 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, where it is distinctly laid down that on information received a summons "shall" issue. It is further urged that the learned Magistrate had made enquiries outside the Court and probably had formed his opinion before he commenced the proceedings against the applicants. In support of this contention the following sentences from the judgment of the Magistrate are quoted: "With regard to Raja Sahib's part in this, I may frankly say that it was on my asking him about the character of these men that he mentioned to me but I did not quite act on it. I had my own independent inquiries made from Pataaris and Mahawa people and people of other villages." There is some foundation for the contention for the applicants. However, in the present case I think it desirable to consider whether the evidence justifies the order made by the learned Magistrate. The evidence on behalf of the prosecution may be divided into three heads, namely, first, evidence relating to the association of the applicants with bad characters, secondly, the connection of the applicants with certain dacoities, thirdly, the evidence with regard to their character. Now with regard to the evidence as to the connection of the applicants with certain dacoities, the evidence is obviously false. Some witnesses depose to the effect that they had seen some of the applicants either immediately before or after the commission of dacoities in Chandarpur and Juhika. They admitted in their evidence that they did not give this information to the Police when the dacoities were under investigation. It is hardly credible that the witnesses would have withheld the information from the Police during the investigation of the crimes, if they really had seen the applicants in or about the scenes of the dacoities immediately before or after their commission. Some of the witnesses depose to having seen the applicants on one or two occasions taking food to or holding conversation with some people who have been recently convicted of dacoity. Again the same remark applies to these witnesses that they did not mention this fact to the Police either during the investigation or after the investigation of any of the dacoities committed recently in the district. The majority of the witnesses depose to the general repute of the applicants. They all say that the applicants are of bad character. The word used by them is "badmash". The witnesses are a Sub-Inspector of a Thana other than that within the circle of which the applicants live, the Naib of the Raja of Jogamanpore, a Patwari and a tenant of the Raja. The number of witnesses for the prosecution is 16, two of whom only come from the village where the applicants live. The others come from other neighbouring villages. On behalf of the defence 22 witnesses have been produced, two of whom come from the village of the applicants and the others from neighbouring villages. Some of them are of good status in life as far as money goes. All of them with one voice say that the applicants are men of good character and a great many of them say that there is enmity between the applicants and the Raja of Jogamanpore. After carefully considering the evidence for both sides in the case I am compelled to come to the conclusion that the evidence for the defence is just as good as, if not better than, that for the prosecution. There can be no doubt that the present proceedings are due to the bad blood between the Raja and the applicants. I do not for a moment say that the proceedings have been initiated by the Raja and that he has procured false evidence. It is quite possible that his servants, knowing that the Raja is displeased with the applicants, have got up the case against the applicants either to please their master or get rid of men who would naturally be on bad terms with the servants of the Raja. It has been laid down in this Court more than once that in a case under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, if evidence for the defence is as good as that for the prosecution, no bonds should be taken from the accused. I, therefore, allow the application, set aside the order of the lower Court and direct that if any of the applicants are in jail they should be set at liberty at once, and if any or all of them have given bonds, those bonds should be discharged.

Application allowed.

LABHU AND ANOTHER—ACCUSED—PETITIONERS

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal trial—Complainant, death of—Abatement of proceedings—Compoundable and non-compoundable offences.

On the death of a complainant during the pendency of a trial the proceedings abate if the offence complained of was personal to the complainant, that is, if it was one which could be compounded without the sanction of the Court. In other cases, the proceedings do not abate. [p. 798, cols. 1 & 2.]

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Amritsar, with his letter No. 730 of 12th December 1918.

FACTS.—The accused, on conviction by Mahant Raghbir Singh exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the 1st Class in the Amritsar District, were sentenced, by order dated November 23rd, 1918, Labhu under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code to one month's rigorous imprisonment, and Bhagtu under section 323, Indian Penal Code, to pay a fine of Rs. 50 or in default to undergo one month's rigorous imprisonment.

GROUNDS.—Though the death of the complainant during the pendency of the proceedings has not been made a ground of revision, the file shows that the complainant Fazal Din had died prior to November 14th 1918, and from the statement of his mother before me it appears that he died at the end of October. It is clear, therefore, from Rama Nand v. Emperor (1) that the right to carry on the prosecution under section 323, Indian Penal Code, did not survive to the legal representative of Fazal Din, and I think that a prosecution under section 325 must stand on the same footing, the only reason which could exist for making a distinction being that the composition of an offence under section 325, Indian Penal Code, requires the sanction of the Court.

I accordingly recommend that the convictions be set aside, and have directed that the accused Labhu be released on bail pending the orders of the Chief Court.

ORDER.—In this case Bhagtu was charged with having committed an offence under section 323, Indian Penal Code, and Labhu was charged at the same trial with having committed an offence under section 325, Indian Penal Code, the complainant being one Fazal Din who died during the progress of the trial. Labhu was convicted and sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment and Bhagtu was also convicted and directed to pay a fine of Rs. 50. The proceedings have been forwarded for revision by the Sessions Judge, Amritsar, on the ground that the right to carry on the prosecution abated on the death of the complainant and that consequently the accused persons should not have been convicted. Rama Nand v. Emperor (1) is authority for holding that the charge under section 323, Indian Penal Code, was in respect of an offence personal to the complainant and that upon the complainant's death proceedings in respect to that charge must be deemed to have abated. Acting upon this authority, so far as Bhagtu is concerned, I accept the recommendation of the Sessions Judge and set aside the conviction and direct the fine, if levied, to be refunded.

It appears to me, however, that there is an essential difference in this respect between cases falling under section 323 and section 325, Indian Penal Code, inasmuch as the former are componndable without the sanction of the Court, whereas an offence under section 325, Indian Penal Code, cannot be compounded unless the Court expressly grants sanction. While, therefore, the former cases may be held to be personal to the complainant, the latter cannot fall within the same category. I, therefore, uphold the conviction of Labhu, but as he has already suffered nineteen days' imprisonment, I reduce his sentence to the amount of imprisonment already undergone by him.

CIVIL MISCELLANEOUS No. 276 OF 1919.

In the matter of Pandit AMRITA LAL, MUKHTAR OF GORAKHPUR.

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879*), s.* 13 (f)—Unprofessional conduct—Letter, abusive, addressed to Sub-Divisional Officer.

A Mukhtar practising in a Sub-Division addressed certain letters to the Sub-Divisional Officer in connection with a copy for which he had applied. The contents of the letters were grossly insulting, and the matter was reported to the High Court, where it was contended that, on the facts, there was nothing which would entitle the Court to take action under sections 13 and 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act:

Held, that the Mukhtar could be proceeded against under section 13 (f) of the Act. [p. 799, col. 1.]

Civil miscellaneous, on a report of the District Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 17th of April 1919, under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act.

Mr. P. D. Tandon, for the Appellant.

The Officiating Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—A notice has been issued to Pandit Amrita Lal, Mukhtar, by a Full Bench of this Court on a report of the District Judge of Gorakhpur, dated the 17th of April 1919, to show cause why the report made against him should not be accepted and why proper orders should not be passed against him under section 14 of the Legal

In the matter of AMRITA LAL.

Practitioners Act. The substance of the complaint is contained in the District Judge's report and the accompanying papers. It is that the Mukhtar in question, who practises in the Criminal and Revenue Courts in the Kasia Sub-Division of Gorakhpur, had been grossly insulting to a Sub-Divisional Officer in that Court. The language objected to was contained in three letters, dated the 22nd of July, 31st of July and the 5th of August 1918.

We have heard the learned Counsel who represented the Mukhtar in question. He argued upon the wording of sections 13 and 14 of Act XVIII of 1879 but, in the main, confined his plea to a frank admission that the language used in these letters was most improper, coupled with a submission for clemency on the ground that his client had been misled and betrayed into using the language of an improper kind for which he felt genuine regret now that he had time to reconsider his position.

The suggestion that on the facts there is nothing which entitles us to take action under the provisions of sections 13 and 14 of Act XVIII of 1879 cannot possibly be supported. The provisions of section 13 (f) clearly cover the case, and it is unnecessary to discuss whether it would not also fall under the provisions of section 13 (b). The facts are very simple.

The Mukhtar had applied to the Sub-Divisional Officer for a copy of a judgment of acquittal. The record, in which the judgment had been passed, did not happen to be in the copying department of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Kasia and through no fault of his, he was unable to supply a copy of that judgment. It was open to him to forward the application to the headquarters of the Gorakhpur district where the record had been transmitted in the ordinary course, and possibly it was his duty to have forwarded the application to headquarters. It is not quite clear whether the rules of the Kasia Courts had been properly posted up to date but, in any circumstances, if the officer in charge of the copying department had directed, even without official authorisation, that the Mukhtar should himself apply at the headquarters for the copy, he would not have done anything serious or anything which a reasonable person could take exception to. What he did was this. He returned the application to the Mukhtar, who refused to receive it. He sent it again to him by post. The Mukhtar again refused to receive it. Finally the application was torn up. By this act the Mukhtar might have been put to a loss of some thirteen annas. On this the Mukhtar addressed the officer in charge of the copying department (the officer in question being the Sub-Divisional Officer, a Deputy Collector and Magistrate of standing and position) a letter, the terms of which were deliberately insulting and offensive. He followed this up with an even worse letter and ended that particular transaction by a third letter, which was the worst of the three. These letters would have been perfectly intolerable if addressed by one private person to another private person, and it is difficult to understand how any man, holding the responsible position which attaches to members of the legal profession could have been so misguided as to write them.

The question remains, how is this man to be dealt with? His learned Counsel has put forward everything that can reasonably be said on his client's behalf, and we do not consider that he has said anything too much. He has certainly not said too little. He pleads that the case should be met by a reprimand. Now we have a right to look, not only to the letters with which this man was charged before the Sub-Divisional Officer, but to certain other papers upon the record to gather how far a reprimand will meet the case. We find from one of the papers, which was a letter admittedly written by this Mukhtar some months after the first incident, i.e., a letter, dated the 20th of March 1919, that when there was a difficulty about renewing his certificate as a Revenue Agent (a matter with which we have no concern, that has already been decided by the Revenue Authorities), he addressed the Sub-Divisional Officer of Kasia not only in the most offensive manner but actually went so far as to threaten him. The threats undoubtedly were foolish to a degree, they were more like the ravings of a silly child who had lost his temper than the statements of a responsible man. But we are bound to take into consideration that this man, who, we find, when he was proceeded against in the first instance, had said that he had done nothing offensive and that he did not mean to do anything wrong, a few months later used worse language than before. How can we reasonably expect, if we take the lenient view which his learned Counsel has asked us to do, that he will not return to his avocation feeling that he has gained a moral victory, and be even more offensive than before ? We naturally do not wish to stand in any man's way, but we are bound to protect not only Magistrates who are doing their duty and should be helped rather than hindered by members of the Bar but also the credit of the legal profession, and it is our duty to take notice of a incident like this in a manner which shall make for the improvement of the person concerned. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate who made the enquiry suggested that a year's suspension would be sufficient to bring this Mukhtar to his senses. The District Judge appeared to have thought that a larger period was necessary. We are in no way bound by the suggestions made by these officers under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act. Now the matter has come before us, it is our duty to take the action which we consider necessary and after consultation we have come to the conclusion that the least that we can do is to suspend this Mukhtar for two years. He will be suspended from practice for two (2) years accordingly. At the same time he is warned to mend his ways when he returns to practice as his next slip may be his last. The suspension will take place from the date of this order and he will deposit his certificate of practice with the Registrar of the High Court within a week.

Mukhtar suspended.

HARI SINGH—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 431, 435—Proceedings under s. 145—Revision—Death of applicant—Application, whether abates.

An application under section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code for the revision of an order passed under section 145 of the Code abates upon the death of the applicant, the right to carry on the proceedings conferred by sub-section (7) of section 145 being confined to proceedings before a Magistrate.

Criminal revision from the order of the District Magistrate, Lyallpur, dated the 20th May 1918.

Messrs. Beechey and Obedulla, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. C. Bevan Petman, Sewa Ram Singh and Govind Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Sardar Krishen Deo Singh applied for revision of an order of the District Magistrate of Lyallpur, which was apparently intended to be an order under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. While the application was pending the applicant died. His mother wishes to prosecute the case as his representative, and Counsel have appeared on her behalf.

Counsel for the respondent contends that the application for revision abates, and I think the contention is correct. The provision in section 145 (7) of the Criminal Procedure Code that proceedings under that section shall not abate by reason only of the death of any of the parties thereto relates only to proceedings before the Magistrate. In Khazana v. Queen-Empress (1), where a person whose appeal from an order convicting him of an offence had been dismissed died while his application for revision was pending, it was held that by analogy to section 431 of the Code, the application must abate. Following that authority I hold that the application in the present case abates. I also see no sufficient reason for this Court to interfere on its own motion with the District Magistrate's order.

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—The matter raised in the present appeal is this: The plaintiff brought a suit to recover certain amounts that had been awarded to her by some arbitrators on the footing that her deceased husband had an interest in a business. The case went to trial and the present plaintiff succeeded in the first Court to a very considerable extent, though not to the whole of the claim. Both parties then appealed to the District Judge and the District Judge allowed the appeal of the defendant to a certain extent and disallowed the appeal of the plaintiff. Thereupon the plaintiff appealed to this Court and the case came on for hearing before Mr. Justice Newbould, and what Mr. Justice Newbould did was this: He reversed the decision of the lower Appellate Court and remanded the case for determination on the merits. That was what Mr. Justice Newbould stated he intended to do. That order remained unappealed against. It was just as much as an order of any other Court. An order unappealed against must be given full effect to and this order, being unappealed against, I think, ought to be given full effect to. In that view of the case, the decision of the learned Judge, which reversed rightly or wrongly the decision of the lower Appellate Court and remanded the case for trial on the merits, must be taken to be final. At the same time I think that this case is covered by Order XLI, rule 33 of the Civil Procedure Code. The observations of Lord Justice Stirling in the case of Attorney-General v. Simpson (1) seem to show that an order under Order XLI, rule 33, which is substantially in the same terms as the English Order LVIII, rule 4, would cover a case like the present. In that view, Mr. Justice Newbould had ample jurisdiction to make the order remanding the whole case for determination on the merits. Whether he had or had not, I think the present appeal must fail and be dismissed with costs.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Moradabad, dated the 1st February 1919.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble S. Raza Ali, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Moradabad in an appeal directing the plaint filed in the case to be returned to the plaintiff for presentation in the proper Court. The suit was brought in the Court of the City Munsif of Moradabad. One of the pleas taken in defence was that the suit was not cognizable by that Court but should have been brought in the Court of the Munsif of Sambhal. The learned City Munsif set down the suit for hearing, framed proper issues, held that the cause of action had arisen within his jurisdiction and gave the plaintiff a decree. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that no part of the cause of action had arisen within the jurisdiction of the Court of the Munsif of Moradabad City. Without going further into the matter he passed the order now under appeal. That order, no doubt, could be passed under the powers of an Appellate Court as specified in section 107 of the Civil Procedure Code and is also covered by the provisions of Order XLI, rule 33 of the same Code. It is nevertheless an order returning a plaint to be presented to the proper Court, such as is referred to in Order VII, rule 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure. An objection has been taken in this Court to the effect that no appeal lies. On the wording of Order XLIII, rule 1 (a), we were disposed in any case to overrule this objection, but we find that the point is covered by clear authority. It was decided under the former Code of Civil Procedure in Wahidullah v. Kanhaya Lal (1) that an appeal lay from the order of an Appellate Court directing a plaint to be returned. Subsequently in the case of Dalip Singh v. Kundan Singh (2) a Bench of this Court has held that the present Code of Civil Procedure makes no change in the law in this respect. We are, therefore, content to follow these authorities. Assuming that the appeal lies, it raises only one question, namely, whether the lower Appellate Court has not overlooked the provisions of section 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The case before us is in fact very similar in principle to that of Dalip Singh v. Kundan Singh (2), above referred to, except that in that case reference was made to the provisions of clause 2 of section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), whereas in the present case the question was one of territorial jurisdiction and reference is made to the closing part of section 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We think the appeal must succeed on this ground. The lower Appellate Court, before allowing the objection as to the place of suing, should have considered whether there had been a failure of justice consequent on the suit having been instituted in the Court of the City Munsif of Moradabad instead of in the Court of the Munsif of Sambhal in the same district. This point has been altogether overlooked and we must, therefore, follow the precedent set in the case above referred to by setting aside the order under appeal and sending back the case to the lower Appellate Court to be re admitted under its original number in the file of pending appeals and disposed of on the merits. We order accordingly. Costs of this appeal will abide the event of the suit.

TARAPADA MITRA—DECREE-HOLDER—APPELLANT

Rani JAGADAMBA KUMARI—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Execution of decree—Interest, recovery of—Court-fees, whether payable.

In equity and in law a party is required to pay a Court-fee upon the sum for the recovery of which he seeks the assistance of the Court. Thus, where a decree-holder sues to recover a sum as interest in addition to the sum named in the decree, he must pay Court-fees on the amount he claims. [p. 804, col. 1.]

Proceedings under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code which are of the nature of a suit are chargeable with Court-fees. [p. 804, col. 1.]

FACTS.—The decree holder-appellant in this case brought a suit for recovery of money due on a hand-note, Rs. 3,000 principal, and Rs. 4,963-15-0 interest up to the date of the suit. The trial Court gave him a decree for the full amount with costs and interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of suit till the date of realization. The decree holder made an application for execution of his decree against Kunj Behari Singh who was one of the judgment debtors, claiming therein Rs. 9,513-6-0, being total of principal and interest up to the date of the application. Of this sum Rs. 908-6-5 represented the amount of interest from the date of the institution of the suit up to the execution of the decree. Kunj Bahari took exception to the application for execution. He contended inter alia that as the principal was Rs. 3,000, execution for thrice that amount could not be taken out under the usury law. The execution Court gave effect to the objection and reduced the amount claimed in the application from Rs. 9,513 6-0 to Rs. 5,660-2-9. The decree-holder appealed against the above order to the High Court and paid Rs. 2 as Court-fee. The Stamp Reporter submitted that the decree-holder-appellant ought to have paid an ad valorem Court-fee on Rs. 908-6-6, because this sum was the interest which the decree sought to be executed had made payable in respect of the subject-matter of the suit between the date of its institution and the execution of the decree. Rs. 2 was not sufficient Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal.

The Taxing Officer considering the case of general importance referred it to the Taxing Judge. In the course of his order of reference, the Taxing Officer observed as follows:—"The whole question is whether ad valorem Court-fee is to be paid on the amount of interest which a decree sought to be executed has made payable in respect of the subject-matter of the suit; or whether a Court-fee of Rs. 2 is sufficient as has been paid in this particular case. The contention is that Rs. 2 is sufficient in view of Government Notification No. 2650 of the 10th of September 1889 as amended by No. 4344 S. R. of the 6th October 1893, in which it is laid down that the fees chargeable on appeal from orders under clause (c) of section 244 of the old Code of Civil Procedure, Act XIV of 1882, shall be limited to the amount chargeable under Article 1 of the Second Schedule of the Court Fees Act of 1870. Clause (c) of section 244 of the old Code of Civil Procedure runs as follows: —

'Any other questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree or to the stay of execution thereof.'

"Questions of interest which a decree makes payable in respect of the subject-matter of a suit were dealt with in clause (b) of section 244 and were, therefore, excluded from the notification; consequently under the old Code there was no reduction in the matters of interest. It is contended, however, that this clause (b) is included in clause (1) of section 47 of the present Code by virtue of the word 'all' with which this section begins. The question is whether this view is correct.

Under the old Code undoubtedly ad valorem Court-fee was chargeable. Has the present Code made any change in this? I think not. Mesne profits were also included in clause (b) of section 244 of the old Code, but the matter of mesne profits has been settled and ad valorem Court fee is to be paid on this. There seems to be no doubt that interest as well as mesne profits were intended to be taken out of execution proceedings. This is the view taken by Woodroffe and Ameer Ali in their edition of the Code at pages 230 and 231, where they say: 'On the same principle, namely, that questions regarding the amount of both mesne profits and interest should be determined by the decree and not in execution, clause (b) of the former section has been omitted.' In this view the word 'all' does not bring in any portion of clause (b) of section 244. There seems to be little doubt that this view is correct but as I can find no ruling on the subject and as there will be many cases of the kind, I direct that this case be placed before the Taxing Judge for orders."

Mr. Panchanan Banerji, for the Appellant.

ORDER.—The first question for consideration is whether Notification VI, Appendix C, Part A, applies to applications for execution of a decree in respect to interest accruing since the date of the decree itself. The ruling reported as Vithal Hari Athavle v. Govind Vasudeo Thosar (1) is of a date prior to the repeal of the old Civil Procedure Code. By the re-drafting of section 244 in the form now taken by section 47 of the new Code, the notification under consideration has been to a great extent annulled, and now operates mainly upon orders which are appealable under Order XLIII. It cannot affect the provisions of section 47, clause (2), which is entirely new. That clause distinctly contemplates the levy of a Court-fee upon proceedings which are of the nature of a separate suit. It was clearly intended to apply to cases like the present. There is no reason at all why a distinction should be made between the price paid by a suitor for the aid of the Court in the recovery of a sum due upon the original plaint and the price paid for the aid of the Court in the recovery of the sum due upon a petition supplementing the original plaint. In equity and in law the appellant is required to pay a Court fee upon any sum for the recovery of which he asks the assistance of the Court.

The next question is what sum should be paid in this instance. Obviously the plaintiff should pay a Court-fee on any amount which is in addition to the sum named in the decree that he seeks to execute. I am not concerned with the Court-fee paid in the Subordinate Judge's Court. In this Court it will be necessary only to consider how much the appellant hoped to get from the Subordinate Judge and still hopes to get from this Court in addition to the sum which he had obtained by his original decree, and deduct from that sum the amount which he actually did get from the Subordinate Judge. The result will be the value of the relief which he seeks in appeal. Upon that value an ad valorem Court-fee must be paid.

Order accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 2—Execution of decree—Payment out of Court—Decree-holder, whether bound to certify payment within any fixed period—Obligation, nature of.

Except where an Act of the Legislature provides a time for the performance of a duty, the ordinary and natural inference is that the obligation to perform that duty is a continuing obligation. [p. 812, col. 2.]

A decree-holder can, at any time, certify a payment to the Court, and it is enough if he mention the payment in his application for execution [p. 809 col 2; p. 810, col 1; p 811, col. 2; p. 813, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the order of the District Judge, Larkana.

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

PRATT, J. C.—(November 2, 1917.)—This is an appeal from an order of the Sub-Judge, Sukkur, allowing execution of a decree.

The execution application was filed on the 20th April 1914 for execution of a money decree of 1903, which directed payment by annual instalments with a proviso that the whole amount would be payable in case of two defaults.

There was a prior execution application on the 20th of April 1911, but there was no execution application between 1903 and 1911 and the question that arose was whether the decree was alive decree on the 20th April 1911.

Payments of instalments had been made between 1903 and 1911, and it is contended that the decree would not be time-barred in 1911 if those payments were recognised by the Court of execution.

These payments had not been certified and the lower Court allowed the decree-holder to certify after the execution application had been filed.

The lower Court's order was made before the decision in the case of Narsoomal v. Tirathmal (1), where it was held that a payment by a judgment-debtor operates from the date when it is certified, and that if it is certified after the expiry of what would otherwise be the period of limitation, it would not prevent the execution application from being time barred.

The judgments of other High Courts on this point are not uniform. The Calcutta and Madras High Courts have decided that payments may be certified after the period of limitation for execution has expired: Eusuffzeman Sarkar v. Sanchia Lal Nahata (2) and Rajam Aiyar v. Anantharatnam (3). It is difficult to say what would be the view of the Bombay High Court, for that Court has in Hansa Gadhaji v. Bhauda Jagaji (4) taken the novel view that section 258 of the Code of 1882 and presumably also Order XXI, rule 2 (3), is discretionary and not mandatory and that in order to prevent fraud, even the Court executing a decree may admit evidence of uncertified payment. This seems opposed to the plain words of the section and is opposed to the whole course of decisions on that section. The Allahabad High Court in Chhattar Singh v. Amir Singh (5) has come to the same conclusion as that arrived at in Narsoomal v. Tirathmal (1). The ratio decidendi of the Allahabad case is that it would obviously not be within the spirit of Order XXI, rule 2, that certifying of payments on the foot of a decree should rest entirely with the decree-holder and I doubt if this is correct. The certificate by the decree holder is merely an admission which the Court is bound to record. If it were intended that the proceeding should be contentious and that the Court might refuse to record it, the words in rule 2 (3) would have been "certified and recorded" instead of "certified or recorded." No period of limitation applies to the process of certification: Tukaram v. Balaji (6), and this is because the law of limitation applies to litigants and not to the Court and is not to be inserted when the Court is merely asked to do its duty: Balaji v. Kushaba (7).

The judgment in Narsoomal v. Tirathmal (1) seems at first sight to accord with the intention of the Legislature in amending section 258 of the Code of 1882. For the words "shall not be recognised as a payment or adjustment of the decree by any Court executing the decree" have been substituted for the words "shall not be recognised by any Court executing the decree." This variation of the section was evidently intended to supersede the cases in which it was held that an uncertified payment may be recognised for the purpose of determining the question of limitation: Kutubullah Sarkar v. Durga Charan (8). It would seem, therefore, anomalous that a decree holder should be allowed to certify a payment after such a delay that his execution application would otherwise be time-barred.

But on a closer consideration of the subject I confess that the anomaly seems to me to be more apparent than real.

If there has been part payment or, as here, the payment of one instalment, the period of limitation runs from the date of that payment. The decree remains alive for three years from that date. When the decree-holder presents an application with a request that the payment be certified and recorded, he says in effect "record the payment which has kept my decree alive and having recorded it pray grant me execution for the balance." It is the payment which has kept the decree alive, and it is a mistake to regard the process of certification as a revival of the decree.

The effect of the amendment, therefore, is that a decree holder who relies on a payment to avoid limitation must certify it. But as he may do so at any time, he may do so when he files his execution application as in Eusuffzeman Sarkar v. Sanchia Lal Nahata (2). The amendment, therefore, is merely formal and makes no substantive change in the law.

To return to the case of Narsoomal v. Tirathmal (1) the main argument there was that a payment is not a payment until it is certified, because it is only when certified that it operates as a discharge pro tanto of liability. But whether the payment operates as discharge of liability seems irrelevant, for the principle on which section 20 of the Limitation Act rests is that the act of payment is an admission by the maker of the payment that there is a liability to pay.

Again the payment is only a nullity so far as the Court of execution is concerned. If the decree-holder recover in execution although he has been paid out of Court, the judgment-debtor has a remedy by suit, provided his cause of action and the relief he seeks do not involve the determination of any question reserved by section 47 to the Court of execution. See on this point the judgment of Pigot, J., in Azizan v. Matuk Lal Sahu (9). He cannot sue for the money wrongfully taken from him in execution but he can sue for the money the payment of which was not certified. He may say in effect "I paid the money to the decree holder in order that he may apply it in discharging the decree. He has not done so, therefore, I am entitled to recover it." See the judgment of Farran, C. J., in Haji Abdul Rahiman v. Khoja Khaki Aruth (10). No fiction will get over the fact that money was paid. This is well illustrated by the case of Tukaram v. Anantbhat (11). The consideration for the bond in suit in the case was an uncertified payment. Sir Lawrence Jenkins said :—"We at one time were in doubt as to whether it would be said there was no consideration for the bond, inasmuch as it was not certified under section 258, but we think there is no sound foundation for this doubt. In the first place it overlooks the change in the last clause in the section, and in the next place it would be contrary to the fact to hold that there was no consideration." The payment is, therefore, a fact, but the Court of execution will not recognise the payment as made under the decree until it is certified. But as soon as it is certified, the scales fall from the eyes of the Court of execution and it sees the thing as it is and the payment operates as a payment under the decree, at the time when it was made.

The case of Venkaji Babaji Naik v. Shidramapa Balapa Desai (12) was referred to as presenting a close analogy. There the payment of interest could not be proved without reference to a document which was inadmissible for want of registration. But to complete the analogy it must be assumed that the document could have been registered at the time of the suit. If that were so, the payment of interest could be proved by the document as a payment at the time it was made and not as a payment at the date of registration.

It was also said that Order XXI, rule 2 (1), was enacted for the benefit of the judgment-debtor and that the rule would be rendered nugatory if the decree holder were allowed to certify at any time. But I do not think the rule was enacted for the benefit of the judgment-debtor. The Legislature was certainly not thinking of the interests of the judgment-debtor when in rule 2 (3) it prevented him from pleading an uncertified payment. The policy of the rule seems to be that referred to by Lord Macnaghten in Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (13) that "it is of the utmost importance that all objections to execution should be disposed of as cheaply and as speedily as possible." Payments under the decree should be recorded while the evidence as to such payment is fresh, and the judgment-debtor should take steps to enforce such a record within the time limited by Article 174. If he does not so much the worse for him, as the Court of execution will not entertain a plea of a payment not certified or recorded. But there is no time limit for the certification by the decree-holder, for he should not be prevented from doing his duty.

I doubt, therefore, if the case of Narsoomal v. Tirathmal (1) is correctly decided and would refer this appeal for decision to a Full Bench.

without interest, payable by yearly instalments of Rs. 112 on the 15th January 1904 and the 15th January of successive years, which contained a proviso that on failure of two successive instalments the unpaid balance was to become payable forthwith.

It has been found by both the lower Courts that payments equivalent to the first five instalments, and paid and received as such, were made by the judgment-debtor during 1904-09, that nothing was paid towards the instalments of 15th January 1909 and of the 15th January 1910; and prima facie the unpaid balance became due on the 16th January 1910

On the 24th April 1911, the judgment-creditor put in an application for execution, stating in the appropriate column that the first five instalments had been paid. Notice was issued under Order XXI, rule 22, but the plaintiff not appearing on the day of hearing, the application was dismissed with costs.

The application with which we are now dealing was filed on the 20th April 1914. In that application the judgment-creditor again admitted payment of the first five instalments.

The original Court was of opinion that, in order to duly certify a payment under Order XXI, rule 2, a judgment-creditor should put in a separate petition giving rise to a definite proceeding, and that, no such petition having been filed, the payments of the several instalment amounts had not been "certified" and that, accordingly, they could not be recognised by the Court for any purpose whatever. The Court, therefore, treated the instalments as not paid, and held that the whole balance became due on the 16th January 1908, and that the decree was time-barred prior to the first application of 20th April 1911, and dismissed the application with costs. The fact that the very basis of the decision is admittedly fictitious—for both sides contended that the first five instalments had been paid—suggests that the decision is incorrect.

The lower Appellate Court held that a payment could be certified by a judgment-creditor under Order XXI, rule 2, at any time, and that the admissions of payment in the two applications constituted due certifying under the rule, and set aside the order of the first Court, ordering execution to issue for the balance of the decretal amount.

The judgment-debtor now appeals and Mr. Rupchand on his behalf relies on the judgment of this Court in Narsoomal v. Tirathmal (1). Order XXI, rule 2, declares that no payment or adjustment by a judgment debtor, which has not been certified or recorded as prescribed in the rule, shall be recognised by any Court executing the decree.

Clause (1) states that where any money is paid out of Court, the decree-holder shall certify such payment to the Court, and the Court shall record the same accordingly.

Under clause (2) the judgment-debtor may also inform the Court of the payment and apply to the Court to issue a notice to the decree-holder to show cause why payment should not be recorded as certified.

Article 174 of the Limitation Act, First Schedule, limits the period within which a notice can issue under clause (2) to 90 days. Rule 2 is merely a rule of procedure, declaring that, unless there be evidence of a specified and conclusive nature, the Court executing the decree shall not recognize a payment or adjustment made out of the Court. The object of the rule is to reduce to the utmost simplicity the settlement by the Court executing the decree of any dispute as to whether or not a particular payment has been made towards the decretal debt. Where a decree-holder makes a written admission that he has received payment, that is, prima facie, conclusive proof against him. If he fail or refuse to make written admission of a payment actually made, the judgment-debtor may within 90 days of payment initiate proceedings to have the question tried and determined. But, after the lapse of 90 days, the Court may refuse to try the matter as a contentious question, and if there be no written admission when the question comes before the Court, it must ignore the payment.

There is nothing in the rule to justify the contention that the judgment-creditor can certify a payment only by application. An application is, essentially, a formal request to the Court to pass some order and it is suggested that the judgment-creditor must at least ask that the payment be recorded. But under clause (1) the judgment creditor has merely to "certify," that is, file a declaration in writing that the payment has been made. The "recording" follows, or should follow automatically; but it is enough for the purposes of clause (3) that the payment is certified.

No particular form of certificate is prescribed, and no such brief period of limitation is laid down for the certifying by a judgment-creditor, as is prescribed for an application by the debtor; for, otherwise, the judgment-creditor, by informality in his certificate or delay in filing it, might recover his debt several times over, even though he truthfully admitted payment in his successive applications for execution. The fact that he is bound to certify all previous payments in any application for execution prevents the rule from working injustice to the debtor. But a written admission by a decree-holder that he received part payment on a certain date is not proof of such payment as against the judgment debtor, and, where limitation is pleaded, and it is to the interest of the judgment-creditor to admit a certain payment, and of the judgment debtor to deny it, the provisions of section 20 Limitation Act, declare that the fact of payment must appear in the handwriting of the person making the same. Thus, it appears that, whenever payment is denied by one party or the other, the Court executing the decree can insist on the production of what at least purports to be a written admission by the party denying payment, before it recognises the payment or even goes into the question at all.

It has been argued on the strength of Narsoomal v. Tirathmal (1) that no payment which is not certified "before the expiration of the prescribed period" is an "effectual payment" under section 20, Limitation Act, so as to prevent an application for execution being barred.

The learned Judge in that case held the test of a good payment under section 20, Limitation Act, to be "Is it of such a nature that it would be an answer to a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover the amount?" If the judgment-creditor put in an application for execution within 3 years of the decree without admitting the payment the debtor cannot plead payment, because it has not been certified. Therefore, the payment is not such as to be an effective answer to a suit, and is not effective until certified. It follows that a payment which is not certified till after the expiration of the prescribed period is insufficient to operate for the benefit of the judgment creditor under section 20. Further Order XXI, rule 2, was intended for the protection of the judgment-debtor, and not for the creditor's benefit, and to hold that a decree-holder can certify at the last moment and still get the benefit of section 20, Limitation Act, would practically make the rule a dead letter.

But, with reference to the learned Judge, part payment of a debt is valid and could be pleaded in a suit by the plaintiff, for the restriction imposed by clause (3) binds only the Court executing the decree. The test offered is unsatisfactory because it is difficult to understand how, in the face of section 47, Civil Procedure Code, any suit could lie. Nor can I conceive a Court granting a decree to a plaintiff for a debt which he admitted had been discharged. The admission would be conclusive.

The payment, if really made, is pro tanto a good discharge. Clause (3) permits the Court to ignore an uncertified payment on the fiction that it has not been made. The judgment creditor is bound to disclose all payments and adjustments when making further application for execution. If he fail, through inadvertence, to certify a payment, the Court cannot recognise the payment until it is certified, but the judgment-creditor can be given an opportunity to amend his application. If he deliberately and fraudulently deny a payment, he can be prosecuted criminally and sued for the recovery of any money obtained as a result of his fraud.

Nor can I discover in the rule any ground for the proposition that it is intended for the protection of the judgment-debtor, and that to allow judgment-creditor to certify a payment more than three years after date of decree would be an evasion of its provisions. The rule does not purport to deal with the question of limitation, and to read into a rule of procedure an important modification of the provisions of the Limitation Act is, in effect, to alter substantive law. The principle embodied in the phrase "ultro citroque" is one to which appeal can be made when it is sought to unfairly enforce a contract, but there is no authority, as far as I am aware, for extending the principle to a statutory bar.

The combined result of the rule of procedure and of the provisions of the Limitation Act is that, when the Court executing the decree is asked to determine whether or not part payment of the decretal debt has been made, it can refuse to go into the question unless it has before it a written admission of payment by the judgment-creditor, or the question has been heard and determined in the affirmative on an application duly filed by the judgment-debtor; and, if the judgment-debtor deny that a payment effective for the purposes of section 20, Limitation Act, has been made, then the Court must have before it, also a written admission made by or on behalf of the debtor.

The view herein expressed is consistent with that taken in Eussuffzeman Sarkar v. Sanchia Lal Nahata (2), Khushalchand v. Nandram (14), Hansa Gadhaji v. Bhawa Jogaji (4), Tukaram v. Babaji (6) and Biroo Gorain v. Jainurat Koer (15).

It is asserted that the High Court of Allahabad has taken a different view. In Bhajan Lall v. Cheda Lall (16) it was held (by a single Judge) that a judgment creditor cannot certify a payment made to him out of the Court after the decree has become barred by limitation (See head-note and page 825*). To the ruling as thus stated no exception can be taken, but we must not confuse adjective and substantive law. If, as a matter of fact, part payment has been made within 3 years, the decree cannot be time-barred merely because the special form of proof demanded by a rule of procedure has not been recorded within three years. If a party has a right, he is prima facie entitled to prove it.

This case has not been reported in the Indian Law Reports but was referred to and followed in Chhattar Singh v. Amir Singh (5). In that case it was assumed that a decree-holder might at any time come in with an application to the Court that he should be at liberty to certify a payment and have it recorded; but the Court had before it nothing but an application for execution alleging that certain payments had been made, and held that it had not been the practice in that province to recognise such admission as "certifying" within the rule. This was a sound basis for the finding; a rule of practice was interpreted according to the practice of the Court. But, the last paragraph of the judgment suggests that the learned Judges were under the impression that to satisfy the requirements of clause (3) of the rule the payment had to be both certified and recorded.

I concur in the order proposed by the learned Judicial Commissioner.

Mr. Rupchand Bilaram, for the Appellant

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT OF THE FULL BENCH.

PRATT, J. C.—I have fully stated my reasons in the referring judgment to which I adhere. Order XXI, rule 2 (1), makes it obligatory on the decree holder to certify payment and on the Court to record the same.

The decree holder may do so at any time and when he has done so, the bar of sub rule (3) is removed and the payment or adjustment is a fact which can be proved either for the purpose of extending limitation under section 20 or of fixing a new starting point for limitation under Article 182 (7).

I do not agree that the object of sub-rule (3) is to provide a sanction for the obligation imposed on the decree holder. It is rather, as I have already pointed out, intended to impose a sanction on the judgment-debtor. No doubt if a decree-holder certifies only after his execution application has been filed, the Court might refuse to allow the execution application to be amended in accordance with the fact certified and reject it on the ground that it did not comply with Order XXI, rule 11 (2) (e), but this is purely a matter concerning the exercise of the discretion given by Order XXI, rule 17.

I concur in dismissing the appeal with costs.

FAWCETT, A. J. C.—I concur that the appeal should be dismissed with costs. The decree-holder in his application of 20th April 1911 stated that all the first five instalments had been paid up on due dates and that the first default in payment of two consecutive instalments arose on 15th January 1910. On the basis of these statements the application was within time under Article 182 (7) of the Limitation Act. What then are the grounds on which it can be said that the application of 1911 was out of time? The first one raised is that the instalments were not actually paid on the due dates, as stated in the application but otherwise (as has been held by both the lower Courts), so that there had been two consecutive defaults at any rate on 15th January 1908. But it is common ground between the parties, and has been held proved, that the payments made up to 1909 satisfied all the first five instalments; and, as the Sub Judge points out, the circumstances clearly justify the application of the principles of waiver and estoppel laid down in Kashiram v. Pandu (17), which has been followed by this and other High Courts. It is not, therefore, open to the appellants to raise this plea.

Mr. Rupchand's next contention is, that it is the duty of the decree holder to certify payments out of Court at once, and he asks the Court to hold that he is bound to do so within the time allowed for the judgment-debtor, viz., 90 days or at any rate within the ordinary period of limitation prescribed for execution of a decree, viz., three years from the time when limitation begins to run. But to fix a definite period of limitation in this manner would be to legislate rather than to construe the enactment contained in Order XXI, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code; and, in my opinion, there is nothing in that rule that could possibly justify the Court in doing this, especially in face of the fact that the Legislature has expressly placed such a time limit in the case of the judgment-debtor and omitted to do so in the case of the judgment-creditor. At the same time there is one qualification that I would make. I think sub-rule (3) of Order XXI, rule 2, clearly implies that a payment or adjustment on which a decree-holder relies for showing that his application for execution is within time, must be certified by him before the question whether such payment or adjustment should be recognised, first comes before the Court executing the decree; and that a payment or adjustment certified thereafter cannot be recognised. To hold otherwise leads to a manifest absurdity. If the decree-holder can certify a payment or adjustment at any time after the question arises (for instance, even in appeal as the District Judge held could be done in this case), then so far as the decree-holder is concerned, there is no practical distinction between an uncertified and a certified payment, and the former can be turned into the latter whenever the decree-holder finds this convenient. An object of sub rule (3) is clearly to provide a 'sanction' (in the Austinian sense) for the obligation imposed in the previous part of the rule; and so far as the decree-holder is concerned, this object would be entirely neutralised by a construction of the rule, permitting the decree holder to certify a payment or adjustment at any time without any restriction whatever. That being so, I think the Court must construe the words "certified or recorded" in sub-rule (3) as at any rate restricted to payments or adjustments "certified or recorded" before the question of their recognition arises in execution, so as to avoid a manifest absurdity and a result that cannot reasonably be held to have been intended by the Legislature, cf. Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, 3rd Edition, page 177, and Hardcastle on Statutory Law, 3rd Edition, page 175. These considerations do not appear to have been present to the minds of the Judges in the cases which hold that a decree-holder can certify at any time without restriction. The leading case on the point is Tukaram v. Babaji (6). Farran, C. J., in his judgment there merely follows the similar opinion expressed by him in Haji Abdul Rahiman v. Khoja Khaki Aruth (10), which in turn is based on the Calcutta Full Bench ruling in Fakir Chand v. Madan Mohan Ghose (18). In that case the judgment in stating the facts says:—"The plaintiff applied under section

(17) 27 B. 1; 4 Bom. L. R. 688.

216 of Act VIII of 1859 for the issue of a notice calling on the judgment-debtor to show cause why the decree should not be executed against him, and he stated that the defendant had paid the earlier instalments which became due more than three years before the time of the application, and the question was whether the plaintiff could be allowed to prove that those payments had been made to him as the instalments became due, the payments not having been made by the defendant to the plaintiff, through the intervention of the Court." It is clear, therefore, that the plaintiff did sufficiently certify the payments by his statements in his application for execution; and according to later rulings no formal subsequent certification was really necessary. This and later cases such as Lakki Narain v. Felamani Dasi (19) and Rajam Aiyar v. Anantharatnam (3) merely proceed on the fact of no period of limitation being prescribed for such a case; but if my view is correct, this is not conclusive. The case of Eusuffzeman Sarkar v. Sanchia Lal Nahata (2) in effect adopts that view and does not go against it. For, all the learned Judges say on this point is, "It appears to us that the decree-holder may either apply to certify payment before execution or may do so on the application for execution." They do not say that he can do this after the application for execution, on which the question of recognition arises. In Narsoomal v. Tirathmal (1) this point was not gone into, because (on the view taken in that case) it was unnecessary to do so for its decision.

The only other ground on which it can be said that the application was time-barred is the view adopted by the Allahabad High Court in Ohhattar Singh v. Amir Singh (5). It was there held that a statement in the application that the first four instalments had been received could not be treated as a "certifying" under Order XXI, rule 2, and that the Court was bound, therefore, to assume that no such payments had been made. But this view is based mainly on a different practice stated to exist in the United Provinces, whereas this Court has already in Narsoomal's case (1) held that, in Sind, there is no valid reason why payments should not be certified in the application for execution. The payment of the first five instalments was, therefore, sufficiently certified in the application of 1911, and could be recognized by the executing Court. The payments were no doubt incorrectly stated in that application, but the statement gave the net result as accepted by the parties. It was, therefore, really a case of an "adjustment" of part of the decree which was duly certified to the Court.

I can find nothing in Narsoomal's case (1) which prevents the appeal being dismissed, and the question of the correctness of that decision in regard to payments relied on under section 20 of the Limitation Act does not really arise. But, as the point has been fully argued, I may say that on further consideration I think the arguments, on which the judgment in that case is based, are not sound. They apply to the point under discussion a recognition test for determining what (in cases other than an actual payment in money) is a good payment under section 20 of the Limitation Act and the corresponding English Law, cf. Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XIX Article 116, page 70. That test, however, cannot be properly applied to a money-payment, and that being so, I think it cannot be applied at all in the manner in which it was in that judgment.

KEMP, A. J. C.—This second appeal involves the decision of a question under Order XXI, rule 2 (1) of the Code of Civil Procedure.

On 20th November 1903, plaintiff obtained a decree on an award for Rs. 979-8-0 payable by annual instalments of Rs. 112 per annum.

The decree provided that in default of payment of any two consecutive instalments the whole amount should become due. The instalments were payable on and from 15th January 1904.

On 20th April 1914 the decree-holder filed an application for execution in which he gave credit for five annual instalments of Rs. 112 each and applied for execution of the balance, Rs. 419-8-0. That application was dismissed for default.

On 20th April 1914 he again applied for execution notifying in his application that the payments for which he had given credit in his application of 20th April 1911 were not made in the amounts and on the dates stated in that application, but that they amounted in all to Rs. 560 and represented the first five annual instalments. As a matter of fact the payments were made as under:—

Rs. 112 some time in 1904.
Rs. 150 on 3rd February 1906.
Rs. 174 on 26th February 1907.
Rs. 112 on 20th January 1909 and
Rs. 12 further were given credit for in grain.

It is clear from the above that the first two consecutive defaults occurred on 15th January 1906. This, however, was waived by the acceptance of Rs. 150 on 3rd February 1906. Subsequent defaults were similarly waived by the acceptance of subsequent payments, and the position at the date of the application for execution of 20th April 1911 was that the whole balance of the decree had become payable on 15th January 1910 by virtue of default in payment of two consecutive instalments on 15th January 1909 and 15th January 1910.

Prior to the application of 20th April 1911 none of the payments had been certified as required by Order XXI, rule 2 (1) of the Code. Subsequently, on 20th April 1914, after his application of 20th April 1911 had been dismissed for default of appearance, the decree holder filed his second application for execution. The Sub Judge, Mehar, considered it was time-barred on the ground that the Court could take no notice of payments which were not certified. The District Judge, Larkana, reversed this order, holding that there was no time-limit for certifying such payments. Clearly, unless the Court can take notice of the payments, the decree would be time-barred.

The judgment-debtor appealed and the appeal came on before Pratt, J. C., and Crouch, A. J. C. Both these learned Judges were of opinion that payments under Order XXI, rule 2 (1), could be certified by the decree-holder at any time. They considered, however, that their decision was inconsistent with the decision in Narsoomal v. Tirathmal (1) and referred the point, therefore, for decision to this Full Bench.

The reference appears to have been made under Part II, Chapter I, rule 3 of the Rules of the Court, both Judges having concurred that the matter before them should be heard by a Full Bench.

Now it is to be noted that the facts in Narsoomal v. Tirathmal (1) were not the same as in the present appeal, although it is true that the same question arises in both cases as to whether there is any period of limitation prescribed for a decree-holder certifying payments under Order XXI, rule 2 (1) of the Code. There was, however, this distinction between the case of Narsoomal v. Tirathmal (1) and the present case, that in the former the decree-holder sought by the payment to extend the period of limitation by invoking the assistance of section 20 of the Limitation Act, whereas in the case before us he asks the Court to say from what date limitation began to run.

It may be that there are different principles applicable to these two sets of facts and I prefer, therefore, to restrict my decision to the facts of the case before us.

Turning to Order XXI, rule 2 (1), it seems to me to lay down in clear and express terms an absolute duty on the decree-holder to certify payments made under the decree. It lays down in equally clear terms the duty of the Court to record such payments. That being so, I fail to see how it can be said that any period of limitation is prescribed for performing this duty cast upon the decree-holder. That appears to me to be the short answer to the contention that if the decree-holder does not certify such payments within a certain time, be it 90 days as Mr. Rupchand contends or 3 years under Article 181 of the Limitation Act, he is barred from certifying them.

Except where the Act provides a time for the performance of a duty, the ordinary and natural inference is that the obligation to perform that duty is a continuing obligation.

In the case before us the decree-holder does not, as in the circumstances where section 20 of the Limitation Act is relied upon, seek any advantage by getting the payments certified.

The judgment debtor admits the payments, so that there remains nothing for the Court to do but record them. Had the judgment-debtor disputed the payments or any of them, it would have been obligatory on the Court at the instance of the decree-holder to have inquired into the fact of the payments. Order XXI, rule 2 (1), only applies when the money has been paid and to see whether it has to perform the duty of recording payments, the Court must first decide whether the payments have been made.

The conclusion that no period of limitation is prescribed for the decree-holder to certify payments under the decrees is also, perhaps, supported by the fact that the Legislature has expressly provided in Article 174 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act for the case of the judgment-debtor who has an option in making the application under Order XXI, rule 2 (2), whilst no express provision is to be found in the Limitation Act for the case of the decree-holder on whom there is cast the duty to apply.

The trend of decisions seems to favour the same view. The cases have all been discussed in the judgments of the learned Judges who made this reference and I cannot see that any profitable result can be achieved by going over them again.

It is also clear from the rulings that it is enough to satisfy the provisions of Order XXI, rule 2 (1), if the decree-holder mentions the payments in his application for execution.

In this case I have assumed that receipt of an instalment or instalments in arrears amounts to a waiver of the default. Mr. Rupchand wishes to dispute that, but I am not prepared to depart from the ruling in Kashiram v. Pandu (17) and the decisions of this Court on the point.

I, therefore, think the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL AGAINST ORDER No. 178 OF 1918.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, O. II, r. 2—Suit for possession based on title as landlord, dismissal of—Second suit based on reversionary right, whether maintainable—Cause of action—Res judicata—Multiplicity of claims.

The dismissal of a suit for possession of property wherein the plaintiff claims to be the defendant's landlord, does not bar a subsequent suit by the plaintiff against the same party for possession as the reversionary heir of the last male owner, either under section 11 or under Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, as the title put forward in the first suit based on the contractual relationship of landlord and tenant and the title put forward in the second suit as one of the heirs of the last male owner constitute different causes of action. Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—One of the considerations to be kept in mind when considering the question what ground of attack ought to have been advanced in the first suit is whether under Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, it was 'practicable' to have framed the first suit by alleging the facts put forward in the second suit without the evidence respectively adduceable on the two sets of facts becoming mutually destructive. [p. 817, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order and judgment of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 16 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the 2nd Additional District Munsif, Madura, in Original Suit No. 2 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The lower Appellate Court should not have remanded the suit. The present suit is barred by reason of the decision in Original Suit No. 129 of 1913. The allegation in the present suit was a 'ground of attack' which was open to the plaintiff in the prior suit. Not having availed himself of it, he could not again be permitted to harass the defendant with fresh facts and causes of action

The question is not whether the allegations in the second suit are superficially destructive of the allegations in the first, but whether a judicial mind can grasp the title in both suits as substantially the same.

Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Respondent.—The present suit is not barred either under section 11 or under Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, by reason of the decision in Original Suit No. 129 of 1913. The titles set up in the two suits are different and the causes of action are separate and are not identical. The title in the first suit was based on the relationship of landlord and tenant. In the present suit the plaintiff claims as heir of the last owner. He need not have rested his case on this title also or as an alternative in the former suit. Every suit need not include every cause of action or every claim which a party has. See the Privy Council decision in Pittapur Raja v. Suriya Row (1). See also Ramaswami Ayyar v. Vythinatha Ayyar (2), in which the Judges observed that a plaintiff need not unite all the causes of action which he might have against the defendant in respect of the corpus or object-matter of the suit, but that he is only required to bring forward his whole case as to the matter of litigation on the question of right involved in the suit.

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—The question raised in this appeal is one of res judicata. The contesting parties are the plaintiff and his sister, the 3rd defendant. The District Munsif dismissed the suit, holding that it was barred by reason of the decision in Original Suit No. 129 of 1913 by the Appellate Court. The Subordinate Judge, who was the same Judge who decided the appeal in the other suit, held that his decision did not operate as res judicata in this suit and sent the case back to the District Munsif for deciding the other issues.

In Original Suit No. 129 of 1913 (587 of 1912) the plaintiff sued as lessor to recover rent and to obtain possession of the suit house from the 3rd defendant, setting up (1) an arrangement whereby his own mother Nagammal and his two aunts Almelu and Mariayee, being unable to discharge the debts of their mother Chellayee and aunt Minakshi, agreed to let 1st plaintiff have the exclusive possession of the suit property on condition of his discharging those debts, (2) a lease of the house from month to month to the 3rd defendant. He alleged in the plaint a single cause of action which was the date of default in the payment of rent, April 1st, 1912.

The District Munsif found for the plaintiff on the issue as to letting and against the defendant upon the independent title set up by her. He did not decide the question as to the plaintiff's title, as he considered the issue unnecessary. He gave the plaintiff a decree for rent and possession. The Subordinate Judge found against the plaintiff both on the lease and on the exclusive title set up by him and dismissed the suit.

In Original Suit No. 129 of 1916 the plaintiff sued as reversionary heir of his great grandfather, Thandavamurthi Goundan, to obtain (1) a declaration of his own and his cousin Palani Goundan's (2nd defendant's) title as reversioners, (2) possession of the house marked A in the plan together with mesne profits. He repeated in his plaint with some variations as to time and persons concerned the story about the family arrangement under which he was to discharge the debts of Chellayee and Minakshi. He alleged a partition in March 1910 (that is, prior to the institution of his prior suit but not mentioned in his plaint in that suit), whereby the family arrangement referred to above was re opened and the family houses were divided into three shares and the house marked A was allotted to his share. He stated his causes of action for this suit as arising on three different dates, viz., December 7th, 1908, when his grandmother's sister, Minakshi, who had a daughter's estate died, March 1910, when the alleged partition took place, and February 2nd, 1916, when on appeal he lost his suit in the Subordinate Judge's Court.

As an alternative relief, he asked that if the partition alleged were found against, the family houses might now be divided and the one marked A might be given to him and put in his possession as his exclusive share.

The question whether the plaintiff is to be debarred from proceeding with the present suit must now be viewed from two different standpoints, namely, that of section 11 and that of Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. While it may be confidently asserted that the plaintiff's right as a reversioner has never hitherto been "directly and substantially in issue" in any former suit, it may be argued contra with some reason that public policy does not permit a defendant to be harassed with a multiplicity of suits with all the ingenuity that may be employed in so framing a plaint as to dress up a stale claim in new colours. It may be urged that the 3rd defendant has successfully defeated an attempt to deprive her of possession of the property that she enjoys, only to find herself subjected to a renewed attack on the same property at the instance of the same party (her brother) who has already once failed on the verdict of three Courts. Explanation IV to section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code lays down that any matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of defence or attack in a former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter substantially in issue in such suit. No doubt the plaintiff might in Original Suit No. 587 of 1912 have taken his stand upon his right to succeed to his great-grandfather's property upon the death of Minakshi, seeing that the woman died in 1908 and her sister Chellayee died in 1905. There would have been no objection under Order II, rule 3, to such a joinder of the causes of action in the two suits. He might also have mentioned the partition of properties in March 1910 which he now puts forward. But can it be said that he ought to have done so? To answer this question we must turn to Order II, rule 2, which says that every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action. Now the Privy Council so long ago as 1885 had occasion in Pittapur Raja v. Suriya Row (1) to construe the words of the corresponding section of the Code of 1859, which declared that "every suit shall include the whole of the claim arising out of the cause of action." They then observed that this did not mean that every suit should include every cause of action or every claim which the party had; and they applied the test cited from Moonshee Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsoonnissa Begum (3) of seeing whether the claim in a new suit was in fact founded on a cause of action distinct from that which was the foundation of the former suit. The wording of the Code of 1908 upon this point is a little different from that of 1859, as it substitutes the words "whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action" for the words "whole of the claim arising out of the cause of action."

But Order II, rule 2, clause (1), is identical in language with section 43 of the Code of 1882, and in Ramaswami Ayyar v. Vaythinatha Ayyar (2) this Court adopted the interpretation of the Privy Council and applied it to section 43 which was the law then in force. The learned Judges (Benson and Bashyam Aiyangar, JJ.) also dealt with section 42, which was worded in practically the same language as Order II, rule 1, of the present Code, and ran thus: "Every suit shall, as far as practicable, be framed so as to afford ground for a final decision upon the subjects in dispute and so to prevent further litigation concerning them." They observed that the object of this section was not to require the plaintiff to unite all the causes of action which he might have against the defendant in respect of the corpus or object matter of the suit, but merely to require him to bring forward his whole case as to the matter of litigation on the question of right involved in the suit. They explained the expression "the subjects in dispute" as signifying the jural relation between the parties to the suit, for the determination of which the suit is brought.

If we take this decision to be good law (and I see no reason why we should dissent from it), it may be said that the jural relation of lessor and lessee, on which Original Suit No. 587 of 1912 was based, in respect of the house comprised in the present suit was quite different from the jural relation of owner by right of succession and trespasser, which governs the suit of 1916. The dates when the causes of action arose in the two suits are also different. Of course a finding upon a certain issue or issues in one suit may be res judicata in a later suit between the same parties without the whole of the later suit being barred by res judicata.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in remanding the suit for disposal on the issues other than issue No. 3, which was upon the question of res judicata. This appeal should be dismissed, and each party should be directed to bear his own costs in the appeal.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I agree but I wish to express in my own words my opinion on the legal question involved. Those questions are of great difficulty and were argued strenuously on both sides. In the plaint in the Suit No. 129 of 1913 of the Additional District Munsif's Court of Madura (587 of 1912 of the Principal District Munsif's Court) the plaintiff stated that his grand-aunt Minakshi died "two years ago" (see the 5th paragraph of Exhibit I, dated 21st October 1912) That means that she died about October 1910. The 7th paragraph of that plaint states that the plaintiff's mother and her two sisters entered into some arrangement with the plaintiff (ignoring evidently the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and the plaintiff's brother Pachaimuthu) about paying the debts of the plaintiff's grand aunt Minakshi and his grandmother Chellayee. This implies that agreement was after Minakshi's death in about October 1910 and that she was not a party to it.

In the plaint in the present suit No. 129 of 1916, the plaintiff does not state when his grand-aunt Minakshi died but says (paragraphs 7 and 8 of the plaint) that, after the death of Minakshi and in March 1910, a division took place between the 1st defendant, 2nd defendant and the plaintiff re-opening a previous arrangement between the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and the plaintiff and Minakshi. Thus Minakshi, according to the present plaint, had died before March 1910 and the family arrangement set up in this suit was between her and the plaintiff and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 during her lifetime (and not as between the plaintiff and the plaintiff's mother and the plaintiff's two aunts as set up in the former suit). The cause of action in the former suit was substantially based on the contractual relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and the 3rd defendant whereas in the present case, it is based on the alleged joint title of the plaintiff and of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and on a division between them in March 1910. Having regard to the preponderance of the weight of authority among the many decisions of this Court, of which only Ramaswami Ayyar v. Vythinatha Ayyar (2) and Prambath Manakkal v. Puthengattil Moosamu (4) need be quoted, the former dissenting from Guddappa v. Tirkappa (5) and both overruling Rangasami Pillai v. Krishna Pillai (6) in favour of the view that the explanation to the res judicata section as regards "grounds of attack" does not affect a plaintiff where he sues on a different cause of action and that a suit based on the contractual relationship of tenancy is based on a different cause of action from that based on title, I am constrained with reluctance to hold that the present suit not barred by res judicata by the decision in the former suit.

As regards the question whether the expression "cause of action" will include the facts which were available to the plaintiff to put forward on the date of the previous suit, which, however, he so omitted to put forward in the first suit and which he had put forward for the first time in the second suit in order to establish substantially the same title on which the first suit was brought, the better opinion is that the expression will generally include such facts. But the decided cases disclose that considerable difference of opinion frequently results when learned Judges proceed to consider whether the title set up in the second suit and sought to be established by a particular set of facts is substantially the same as the title set up in the first which was sought to be established by another set of facts and whether hence, the cause of action in the two suits is the same. For instance in Arunachalam Chetty v. Meyyappa Chetty (7) (decided by Subramania Aiyar and Davies, JJ.), a minor who failed in the first suit to set aside a compromise decree passed during his minority on the allegation of fraud on the part of his guardian, was held precluded from bringing a second suit on the new allegation that the decree was passed without obtaining the consent of the Court. But in Ramaswami Ayyar v. Vythinatha Ayyar (2) the learned Judges, Benson and Bashyam Aiyangar, JJ., disapprove of the decision in Arunachalam Chetty v. Meyyappa Chetty (7) (see page 774*). In Masilamania Pillai v. Tiruvengadam Pillai (8) Sir Arnold White, C. J., and Miller, J., differed on the question whether the second suit based on a claim to be the next reversioner, on the allegation that the plaintiff was the sister's son's son of the last male owner, was barred by the dismissal of a former suit in which also the plaintiff had claimed to be the next reversioner but traced his title as the alleged adopted son of the brother of the last male owner. Owing to such difference of opinion, the case went before the present learned Chief Justice (then Wallis, J.) and he held that the title as reversioner was the substantial cause of action in both suits and he decided that the second suit was barred. I shall quote some instructive observations from that judgment: "Apart altogether from authority, it appears to me that, in a suit to establish a claim as reversioner, that claim should be held to be the subject in dispute within the meaning of the section. I should not omit to observe that the provisions of section 42 as to the framing of suits are only to be applied 'as far as practicable,' and if the plaintiff would have been embarrassed in the former suit by relying not only on his alleged adoption by the divided brother of the deceased but also on his descent from the sister of the deceased, it may well be that he would not have been bound to rely on both grounds. This would, I think, be the case if the evidence in support of one ground might be destructive of the other grounds. But there could be nothing of this kind in the present case, and I do not think there is anything unreasonable in holding that the plaintiff in the former suit ought to have relied upon his descent from the deceased's sister as well as upon the adoption, so that if proof of the adoption failed, he might still establish his right as reversioner on the ground of this descent and prevent further litigation regarding it. The judgments of the learned Judges who made the reference do not expressly refer to section 42 of the Civil Procedure Code, and although Ramaswami Ayyar v. Vythinatha Ayyar (2) is cited, it is, I think, possible that the attention of the learned Judges was not specially directed to the observations as to the scope of section 42 which are to be found in different parts of a very lengthy judgment. If I had been obliged to form a conclusion upon the earlier authorities, and apart from section 42, I should have found the task one of great difficulty." Section 42 of the old Civil Procedure Code corresponds to the present Order II, rule 1.

One of the considerations then to be kept in mind when considering the question what grounds of attack ought to have been advanced in the first suit seems to be whether under Order II, rule 1, it was "practicable" to have framed the first suit by alleging the facts put forward in the second suit without the evidence respectively adduceable on the two sets of facts being mutually destructive.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar for the appellant (if I understood him aright on his subtle points) argued that even where the facts newly alleged in the second suit may be destructive of the facts alleged in the first suit, if the title can be grasped by the judicial mind as substantially the same in both suits, the second suit would be barrrd as res judicata and prohibited under Order II, rule 1. He put forward the following or a similar illustration. A has two sale-deeds (say dated respectively in May and June 1910) conveying to him the same property. One was executed by B and the other by C A was doubtful whether B or C was the owner and so he got sale deeds from both. He then sued trespasser D on the strength of his sale deed from B. That suit was dismissed as B's title was found against. Can A then sue D again on the strength of his sale deed from C? Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar argued that A cannot do so and that he ought to have put forward his case under both the sale deeds in the first suit, though the title of B rested on proof of facts inconsistent with those on whose proof C's title had to be established. I think that I need only say that the balance of the authorities seems to be in favour of the view that the second suit is main-tainable in the above illustration (by Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar), though in one sense the jural relation in the two suits between the two parties is the same, namely, the plaintiff as owner and defendant as trespasser. I do not, however, consider it necessary to consider the question in detail because in the present case, the title put forward in the first suit (based on the contractual relationship of landlord and tenant) and the title put forward in the present suit (the title as one of the three heirs of the last male owner) constitute different causes of action, according to several precedents of this Court binding up upon me.

Having thus expressed my concurrence with the conclusion of the lower Appellate Court on the third issue in the suit, namely, whether the suit itself is barred by res judicata, I wish to point out before getting rid of this appeal that at least one other issue ought to have been framed by the District Munsif, namely, whether the finding in the former suit against the plaintiff in respect of his exclusive title to the ownership of house site A (see paragraph 4 of Exhibit IV) is res judicata as between the plaintiff and the 3rd defendant and against the plaintiff in the present suit. The distinction between a finding on an issue being res judicata and the suit itself being barred as res judicata must be clearly kept in mind, and this new issue must also be decided in the remand hearing before the District Munsif. I do not wish to express any opinion on this new issue at this stage.

In the result I agree that the appeal ought to be dismissed. The parties will bear their respective costs of this appeal.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 93—Execution of decree—Sale—Warrant of title—Purchase-money, whether can be recovered on eviction by third person—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 97—Suit to recover money paid on existing consideration, which afterwards fails, maintainability of.

There is no implied warranty of title in an auction-sale under the Civil Procedure Code, either by the decree-holder or by the Court and, therefore, no action lies against the decree-holder for a return of purchase-money paid at a Court auction in execution of a money decree, when the purchaser is evicted by a third party who successfully establishes his title to the property in a regular suit. [p. 818, col. 2; p. 820, col. 1.]

Where the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor is sold and the conveyance effectually passes it, there can be no failure of consideration, for the consideration was the right, title and interest, which ex hypothesi passed, though it was valueless. The same argument applies when property is sold as property believed to belong to the judgment-debtor, where the sale, as in a Court auction, is by implication one with all risks and all defects. [p. 821, col. 1.]

A suit for money paid for an existing consideration which afterwards fails, such as is contemplated by Article 97 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, lies if there is a contract between the parties. [p. 821, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No. 128 of 1917, decided on 7th September 1917, arising out of Civil Suit No. 149 of 1916, in the Court of the Munsif, Darwah, decided on 26th April 1917.

The Hon'ble Sir Bipin Krishna Bose, for the Appellant.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The point for decision is whether an action lies against the decree-holder for a return of the purchase money paid at a Court auction in execution of a money decree, when the purchaser is evicted by a third party who successfully establishes his title to the property in a regular suit.

In Krishnaji v. Ladhuram Ghasiram (1) I held that, apart from fraud or neglect of a duty, an auction-purchaser is not entitled to maintain a suit under the present Code of Civil Procedure for the return of the purchase-money on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold.

In my view there is no implied warranty of title either by the decree-holder or the Court in such sale, and the statutory right recognised by Order XXI, rule 93, is now confined to the case where a sale of immoveable property is set aside under rule 92, there being nothing corresponding to the 2nd paragraph of section 315 of the Code of 1882, which recognised a similar right "when it is found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property which purported to be sold, and the purchaser is for that reason deprived of it."

I have dealt with many of the cases now cited in my previous judgment. The only new case to which my attention has been drawn is one which fully supports my view: Nannu Lal v. Bhagwan Das (2).

The following passage in my previous judgment has been criticised on behalf of the appellant:

"As the present Code of Procedure, like Act VIII of 1859, does not recognise such a right except when a sale is actually set aside under Order XXI, rule 92, the plaintiff's suit has, in my opinion, been rightly dismissed."

It is correctly pointed out that there are certain changes which have taken place since 1877 which were not noticed in the judgment. Under Act VIII of 1859, section 249, the proclamation shall declare that the sale extends only to the right, title and interest of the defendant in the property specified therein. It is, therefore, urged that there could be no warranty of title under section 249, and section 259 there allowed the purchaser to receive back his purchase-money only when a sale of immoveable property is set aside. A change in the law has undoubtedly been introduced since 1877. What the sale proclamation now offers is no longer the right, title and interest of the judgment debtor, but the property to be sold which has to be fully described, so as to give the intending purchaser all necessary information as to what he is going to buy. This is clear from section 287 of the Codes of 1877 and 1882 and also from Order XXI, rule 66, which further requires an application for an order for sale to be verified, so far as the matters required to be specified in the proclamation are known to or can be ascertained by the person making the verification. Similarly, when an attachment of immoveable property is applied for, a specification of the judgment-debtor's share or interest in such property, "to the best of the belief of the applicant" and "so far as he has been able to ascertain the same," has to be made. (See section 237 of the Codes of 1877 and 1882 and Order XXI, rule 13.) I fully agree that a duty is now cast upon the decree holder, for a breach of which an action in damages would lie. This I have already recognised in my previous judgment. If fraud or deceit is established in reference to the specification of the property the auction-purchaser will undoubtedly have a remedy, but I cannot regard this statutory duty on the part of the decree holder as creating an implied warranty of title. If an ordinary sale-deed contained a covenant that the vendor believes the property sold to be his, but does not assert or warrant it to be so, one could scarcely argue that there was an implied warranty of title, especially when the sale is by implication one with all defects in the title.

So far as the particular points just dealt with are concerned, the present Civil Procedure Code has been framed on the same lines as the repealed Code of 1882. I agree with the following observations of Straight, C. J., and Banerji, J., in Chandar Mukerji v. Nain Sukh (3):

"We think that a purchaser is only entitled to receive back his purchase-money under the conditions stated in section 315, whether by application under that section or by suit. As regards private sales, there is under section 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, an implied covenant for title by the vendor. As regards sales under a decree of a Court, there is no warranty of title either by the decree-holder or by the Court. Section 237 of the Code shows that the decree-holder, when applying for execution, has only to specify the judgment-debtor's share or interest in the property 'to the best of his belief,' and 'so far as he has been able to ascertain the same.' Section 287 and the form of proclamation of sale prescribed by the rules of this Court show that the proclamation only professes to specify the particulars prescribed by the section, including the property to be sold and the judgment debtor's interest therein, 'as fairly and accurately as possible,' and 'as far as it has been ascertained by the Court' and subject to possible errors, mis-statements and omissions. * * * The result is that the purchaser must be taken to buy the property with all risks and all defects in the judgment-debtor's title, except as provided by sections 313 and 315, that in the absence of fraud his only remedy is to recover back his purchase-money, where it is found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property at all."

The last clause in this passage, it need hardly be pointed out, is inapplicable to the present Code. I hold, therefore, that there is no implied warranty of title under the Civil Procedure Code.

The following cases have been quoted before me on behalf of the appellant to show that a regular suit lay under the Code of 1882 for recovery of the purchase-money: Munna Singh v. Gajadhar Singh (4), Kishun Lal v. Muhammad Safdar Ali Khan (5), Shanto Chandar Mukerji v. Nain Sukh (3), Gurshidawa v. Gangaya (6), Hari Dayal Singh Roy v. Sheikh Samsuddin (7), Nityanund Roy v. Juggat Chandra Guha (8) and Ram Kumar Shaha v. Ram Gour Shaha (9). These cases proceed upon the view that the remedy by an application given by section 315 was not exhaustive. But they do not support the contention that an action lay independently of the 2nd paragraph of section 315 either on an implied warranty of title or for failure of consideration. It may be mentioned that the decisions allowing a regular suit, though unanimously adopted by the learned Judges, have been sometimes doubted as in Kishun Lal v. Muhammad Safdar Ali Khan (5). The right recognised in such cases was a statutory right to which Article 120 of the Limitation Act was generally applied, and not Article 62, as the remedy given by the Code was not a suit for money had and received. Nilakanta v. Imamsahib (10), Amrita Lal Bagchi v. Jogendra Lal Chowdhury (11) and Sidheswari Prasad Narain Singh v. Goshain Mayanand (12). In the last cited case at page 423* the learned Judges say:—

"The real reason is that in a sale by the Court or its officer, there is no warranty of title, and the money which the purchaser pays cannot, either in law or equity, be said to have been received by the Court, its officer, or the creditors for the use of the auction-purchaser."

The appellant strongly relies upon the following observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Dorab Ally Khan v. Abdool Azeez (13):—

"There is, no doubt, a further question whether the plaintiff has shown a case which, if proved, would entitle him to recover back the purchase-money as money had and received to his use as upon a total failure of consideration."

In that case the judgment debtor had title to the property sold, and if the Sheriff of Calcutta who sold immoveable property in Oudh had jurisdiction, his conveyance would have passed the title. Their Lordships say:—

"It was solely because he (the Sheriff) was acting beyond his territorial jurisdiction that the sale became inoperative and wholly ineffectual."

The decision was based on the principle that the Sheriff may be held to undertake by his conduct that he has seized and put up for sale the property sold in the exercise of his jurisdiction, and to this extent there was an implied warranty. This case is, therefore, no authority for holding that an action for money had and received lies, if the judgment debtor in an execution sale has no interest in the property sold. No other case on this point has been cited. As Lord Sumner in Sinclair v. Brougham (14) says, the action for money had and received cannot now be extended beyond the principles in the decided cases.

When only the right, title and interest is sold and the conveyance effectually passes it, there can be no failure of consideration, for the consideration was the right, title and interest which ex hypothesi passed, though it was valueless. It would seem that the same argument would apply when property is sold as property believed to belong to the judgment debtor, where the sale, as in Court auctions, is by implication one with all risks and all defects. Moreover, a suit for money paid upon an existing consideration which afterwards fails, such as is contemplated by Article 97 of the Limitation Act, does not seem to lie except where there is a contract between the parties.

It is urged that the fundamental principles of the law of contract apply to execution sales, and in support of this the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mahomad Kala Mea v. Harperink (15) are relied upon. It is contended that as section 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act now recognises an implied warranty of title, such a warranty of title should also be implied in an execution sale. The fact that the law has been changed in the case of voluntary sales does not justify a judicial extension of the law to the case of involuntary sales.

Lastly, it is pointed out that the view taken by this Court will have the effect of practically depriving the auction-purchaser of all remedy after the confirmation of the sale. This is a matter for the Legislature to consider and not for Judges.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Succession to maiden's stridhanam—Father's brother's son, whether to be preferred to sister.

Where a maiden's mother and father are dead, the heirs to her stridhanam, under the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law, as followed in Madras, are her father's sapindas, the father's brother's son being preferred to the maiden's sister, who only comes in after the male sapindas [p 823, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Tinnevelly, in Appeal Suit No. 67 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tinnevelly, in Original Suit No. 54 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr T. R. Venkatrama Sastri, for the Appellant.—The text enumerates the heirs as "the mother, the father, on their failure their next of kin." "Their next of-kin" means strictly the Sapindas, that being the gist of the text of Mitakshara "Pratyasan" (= nearest) is the word. Marya Pillai v. Sivabagyathachi (1) and Kamala Bai v. Bhagirathi Bai (2). The Sapindas are of both the father and the mother, as the mother becomes exclusively a member of her husband's family and so her Sapindas are strictly her husband's Sapindas. Janglubai v. Jetha Appaji (3). In Bombay the sister is a preferable heir, for a special law prevails there as regards female heirs.

Dwarka Nath Roy v. Sarat Chandra Singh Ray (4) (father's daughter and father's father's brother's son).

Tukaram v. Narayan Ramchandra (5). The Mayukha says that the stridhanam must go to the nearest heir of the deceased or to the nearest heir of the father or husband of the deceased. This is adopted in Tukaram v. Narayan Ramchandra (5). But the principle alone can be applied but not the actual rule as the father's sister and other females are not heirs in Madras. Mayne, Hindu Law, 8th Edition, page 752, paragraph 539.

Mr. P. R. Ganapathy Aiyar, for the Respondents.—Placitum 11 does not apply. This is special property.

Kamala Bai v. Bhagirathi Bai (2) is a clear case which lays down that all our pet theories regarding father's heirs and females not taking are not to be applied as regards stridhanam property.

[NAPIER, J.—But that is based on placitum 11 which, you say does not apply.]

There is nothing in the Mitakshara providing specifically for the failure of the father and the mother. So the other texts too.

Smriti Chandrika, Chapter IX, section 3 (quoting Baudhayana and Brihaspati). Ghose, Volume II. The father's sister and others are declared equal to a mother. The inference, therefore, is that after the father those equal to the mother will take.

[PHILLIPS, J.—If they are equal to the mother, they must take equally with the mother.]

The mother's is also a personal right to succeed. Saraswati Vilasa says the same. Ghose, Volume II, page 1008 (placitum 326).

[NAPIER, J.—If we are bound by the law as laid down in the Mitakshara, we cannot, according to the Privy Council, refer to any and every text writer.]

Only on matters provided for in the Mitakshara. In Arpandai Vathiyar v. Ragubali Mudaliar (6) a mother's sister's son was preferred to a mother's brother's son.

[PHILLIPS, J.—The passage cited from Saraswati Vilasa does not refer to a maiden's estate but to that of a woman dying after betrothal and before marriage.]

Yes.

See Bai Kesserbai v. Hunsraj Morarji (7) and Janglubai v. Jetha Appaji (3). The text of Brihaspati is clearly explained.

[PHILLIPS, J.—That text is used in the Mayukha as regards a married woman. How can we apply it to a maiden's estate under the Mitakshara?]

Marya Pillai v. Sivabagyathachi (1).

Next, in cases of succession to a woman's property, the word 'Sapinda' is to be widely construed. See Kamala Bai v. Bhagirathi Bai (2). That is the sense in which it is used in the Mitakshara. In that sense the father's sister is a nearer Sapinda.

Mr Venkatrama Sastri in reply.—The general direction in placitum 11 of the Mitakshara must be read with placitum 30, which applies specifically to maidens. The omission in placitum 30 to refer back to placitum 11 does not warrant the importation of other texts which do not conform to the Mitakshara. The secondary mothers mentioned in the Smriti Chandrika and the Saraswati Vilasa are to be regarded as such only for regulating succession to their property and not the reverse. Further these texts have no relation to a maiden's estate. The Saraswati Vilasa, Placita 327, 328, put it clearly that way, Ghose Volume II, page 1008.

PHILLIPS, J.—Quite so If they were equal to mothers, they must necessarily come in before the father.]

See Bai Kesserbai v. Hunsraj Morarji (7). Raju Gramany v. Ammani Ammal (8) has held that this text is inapplicable to cases governed by the Mitakshara when the effect would be to override the latter. The text of Brihaspati is not referred to in the Chapter on Inheritance to Males. See also Venkatasubramaniam Chetti v Thayarammah (9). The Privy Council have held in Buddha Singh v.

Laltu Singh (10) that the Smriti Chandrika starts on fundamental principles different from the Mitakshara (at page 619*) and cannot be referred to except for elucidation of dubious passages in the Mitakshara.

Next, as regards the meaning of "Sapinda" the Mitakshara clearly excludes women (see Placitum 11). See Chapter II, section 1.

JUDGMENT.

PHILLIPS, J.—The sole question for determination in this appeal is whether plaintiff or 3rd defendant is the heir to the property of one Gomati Ammal, a maiden. Plaintiff is the father's brother's son of Gomati's father, whereas 3rd defendant is the sister of Gomati's father. In Kamala Bai v. Bhagirathi Bai (2) it was held that when a maiden's mother and father are dead her heirs are her father's Sapindas, and this case followed Janglubai v. Jetha Appaji (3), Tukaram v. Narayan Ramchandra (5) and Dwarka Nath Ray v. Sarat Chandra Singh Ray (4). In Mitakshara, Chapter II, section 11, Pl. 20, there is a text of Baudhayana which says: "The wealth of a deceased damsel let the uterine brethren themselves take. On failure of them it shall belong to the mother, or, if she be dead, to the father," but the Mitakshara is silent as to the succession in default of mother or father. In the above mentioned cases the rule of succession to the property of a woman married in an unapproved form contained in Pl. 11 of the same section was applied by analogy, and it would appear that this decision of three High Courts would be final, but it is contended for respondents that a text of Brihaspati contained in the Smriti Chandrika (Chapter IX, section 3, placitum 36) and the Saraswati Vilasa (placitum 327) provides for the succession after the mother and father. This text no doubt immediately follows the text of Baudhayana in the Smriti Chandrika, but there does not appear to be any connection between the two, for Brihaspati's text relates to what are called secondary mothers, and deals with the succession to their property. In the Saraswati Vilasa the text follows a placitum relating to the property of a betrothed damsel. It is difficult to believe that the succession to a maiden is analogous to the succession to secondary mothers, for a maiden cannot by any stretch of language be treated as a secondary mother, whereas there is no such difficulty in the case of the persons cited, i. e., mother's sister, uncle's wife, father's sister, etc. There is also another difficulty in the way of applying the text in the way contended for by respondents' Vakil, which is that the persons enumerated are the heirs to a maiden's estate, for in the Smriti Chandrika the persons enumerated are said to be equal to a mother. If that be so, they would take the succession after the mother to the exclusion of the father. This is directly opposed to Baudhayana's text in the Mitakshara, which, in this Presidency, must always be preferred to the Smriti Chandrika, when they are not in agreement. Respondents' contention must, therefore, be negatived for two reasons, firstly, because Brihaspati's text does not at all refer to the succession to a maiden's property, and secondly, because if it does refer to it, it is opposed to the Mitakshara. I, therefore, follow Kamala Bai v. Bhagirathi Bai (2) and hold that the heirs to Gomati's property are her father's Sapindas. So far I agree with the District Judge, but he has followed the Bombay High Court in holding that a sister is a nearer heir than the father's brother's son. In Madras, however, the law is that the father's brother's son is to be preferred, the sister only coming in after the male Sapindas. I am unable to accept the contention, based on the single sentence of the judgment in Kamala Bai v. Bhagirathi Bai (2) that the father's Sapindas, in a case when the property of a female is concerned, are different to the Sapindas in the case of a male's property. In the absence of any rule to the contrary the Sapindas must always be the same. The appeal is accordingly allowed, and the Subordinate Judge's decree restored with costs both here and in the lower Appellate Court.

NAPIER, J.—The question raised in this second appeal is as to the succession to the stridhanam property of one Gomati Ammal. The deceased Gomati Ammal inherited the property under a Will from her father, one Muthia Pillai, and it is conceded that the mother is also dead. The contesting parties are the son of the paternal uncle of the deceased's father and the father's sister of the deceased, the uterine brothers who admittedly would have a preference to anyone else having failed. The point has been expressly decided in two cases in Janglubai v. Jetha Arpaii (3) and Tukaram v. Narayan Ramchandra (5), and the view taken by that Court was followed by two learned Hindu Judges of this Court in Kamala Bai v. Bhagirathi Bai (2). It is suggested before us that this question requires reconsideration, in view of the fact that the Mitakshara does not definitely decide the point and that the Bombay High Court relied on the Veeramitrodaya, a work which is not followed in Madras. It is further contended before us that the question is disposed of by a text in the Smriti Chandrika, the language of the Mitakshara is based on the authority of Baudhayana's text, for Baudhayana says: "The wealth of a deceased damsel let uterine brothers themselves take, on failure of them, it shall belong to the mother, or if she be dead to the father." (Chapter II, section 11, placitum 30). As the text stops there, this Court applied the analogy of the succession to the property of a childless married woman which is provided for in placitum 11 of the same section. There the succession is stated as being "to the mother and to the father; on failure of them their nearest-of-kin takes the succession." The translation is that of Borrodaile. The High Court, however, preferred "to their Sapindas" as being a more correct translation. The judgment then proceeds as follows:—"We see no reason for not accepting the view of the Bombay High Court that the Sapindas both of the father and the mother must be understood to mean the same persons, as the mother becomes a member of the father's family on her marriage." It is to be noted that the learned Judges do not expressly follow the language of Veeramitrodaya which is definite on the subject as did the High Court of Bombay, but proceeded by way of analogy arriving at the same result. It is not, therefore, correct to say that the decision of this Court is based on a text which is not an authority in the Presidency.

It remains to consider the text relied on by Mr. Ganapathy Aiyar in his contention that this ruling is incorrect. I feel naturally considerable diffidency in construing a text which is translated, not being myself acquainted with the original Sanskrit. But in spite of that I am satisfied that the text has nothing whatever to do with the subject. In Smriti Chandrika, Chapter IX, section 3, placitum 36, Brihaspati enumerates secondary mothers and points out who takes their property. The sister of a mother, the wife of a maternal or of a paternal uncle, the sister of a father, the mother of a wife and the wife of an elder brother are declared equal to a mother. If they leave no male issue of their body nor a son of a daughter nor a daughter, a sister's son and the like shall inherit their property. Taken by itself, this text has, on its face, no application because we are not construing here the succession to secondary or quasi-mothers. The only mother with whom we are concerned is the real mother; and the question is who on the death of such real mother and father is to succeed. The next objection is that if this text is to apply, it contradicts the language of placitum 30 itself, for that is specific, the words being: "It shall belong to the mother or if she be dead to the father," not to the heirs of the secondary mother. The text is interesting as laying down that these quasi mothers are to be treated as real mother's, but admittedly no such broad proposition is accepted in Hindu Law as applied in this Presidency. The only reason which Mr. Ganapathy Aiyar could urge for applying this text is that it follows the placitum in the Smriti Chandrika which is identical with placitum 30 in the Mitakshara. Both of these texts are to be found in the Smriti Chandrika in section 3, "succession to a woman's property." We were informed at the Bar that the numbers given in the English translations are not in the original, which is borne out by the fact that Placitum 36 in Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar's translation is No. 21 in Ghose's translation. The chapter contains a series of texts on succession to the property of women generally and explanations of the terms used by the sacred writers and the whole chapter is in the nature of dissertation on conflicting views of the authorities.

The only passage which deals with inheritance to the wealth of a damsel appears to be the one placitum of Baudhayana above referred to. The placitum relied on seems to be a note by the learned commentator to the effect that where in the preceding paragraphs inheritance to a mother is dealt with, a specific line of succession is to be applied to these secondary mothers and has no connection whatsoever with the quotation from Baudhayana in the preceding passage. I am confirmed in this view that the passage relied on has nothing whatever to do with the subject by the fact that although Smriti Chandrika is a recognized authority of secondary weight in Madras, the learned Vakils who appeared before our learned brothers in Kamala Bai v Bhagirathi Bai (2) did not think that the passage was worth putting before their Lordships for consideration. In this respect I agree with the judgment of my learned brother.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiff in an action in ejectment. The 1st defendant claims as purchaser of the right, title and interest of the other defendants, who were in possession of the disputed property by right of in heritance from their father. The original grant was in favour of the grandfather of these defendants and the question in controversy between the parties is, whether the tenancy was permanent and transferable. The District Judge, in concurrence with the Court of first instance, has found upon this question against the plaintiff. This decision has been challenged in this Court on the ground that it is based on evidence not admissible in law.

The first document to which exception has been taken is a dar-mokarari lease granted on the 20th February 1830 by Kanchan Singh, the first tenant. The original of this document is not in existence and a copy has been produced which was taken in 1861 and, since then, has been produced in Court on several occasions. It has been contended that as there is no proof of execution of the original, the copy cannot be received in evidence under section 90 of the Indian Evidence Act. In support of this proposition reliance has been placed principally upon the terms of section 90, and it has been argued with considerable force that by no stretch of language can it be said that in the case before us the presumption mentioned in section 90 is applicable to the copy produced. Section 90 provides that where any document purporting or proved to be thirty years old is produced from any custody which the Court in the particular case considers proper, the Court may presume that the signature and every other part of such document which purports to be in the handwriting of any particular person is in that person's handwriting, and in the case of a document executed or attested, that it was duly executed or attested by the persons by whom it purports to be executed and attested. It has been argued that this section contemplates the production of the original document, and that only upon such production can the Court presume that the signature and every other part of the document which purports to be in the handwriting of any particular person was in that person's handwriting. This view, it has not been disputed, may lead to hardship where the original of an ancient document has been lost (though a certified copy is in existence) and no witness is available who can speak to its actual execution; by way of analogy, it has been mentioned that a similar hardship arises in cases where an unstamped original has been lost and a certified copy cannot be received in evidence even upon payment of penalty [Marine Investment Co. v. Haviside (1) and Kopasan v. Shamu (2) which is in conflict with Harun Chunder v. Russick Chunder (3)]. We do not think any question of hardship really arises for consideration; what we have to determine is, whether the interpretation of section 90 suggested by the appellant is justified by its language; that, we think, must be conceded in his favour. But it is admitted that a different construction was placed upon section 90 by Mr. Justice Wilson in the case of Khetter Chunder Mookerjee v. Khetter Paul Sreeterutno (4), which was accepted as good law though with some hesitation by Sir Arthur Strachey in the case of Ishri Prasad Singh v. Lalli Jas Kunwar (5). The observations in Vasudeo v. Bhau (6) possibly tend in the same direction, while the observations in Appathura Pattar v. Gopala Panikkar (7) support the contrary view. In view of this divergence of judicial opinion, it would have been our duty to construe the terms of section 90 of the Indian Evidence Act; but whatever our opinion might have been if the matter were res integra, we are bound by the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Shahzadi Begam v. Secretary of State (8) which, we think, concludes the point against the appellant. As it has been contended, however, that the point which now requires consideration was not decided by their Lordships, we must examine the circumstances of that case. In that case reliance was placed upon a deed of exchange, the original of which had been lost. A certified copy, obtained in 1851, was produced at the trial. The genuineness of this certified copy was questioned. The District Judge found that the certified copy was genuine and admitted it in evidence. Upon appeal to this Court, the certified copy was pronounced a forgery and the document was consequently rejected. When the matter went before the Judicial Committee, reliance was placed on behalf of the appellant upon the certified copy, and it was argued that the certified copy was not a forgery because it bore the same stamp and water marks as other contemporary documents, admittedly genuine and produced in a previous litigation between the parties. The respondents contended that the certified copy was a forgery, and also argued that the certified copy, even if genuine, was not admissible. On behalf of the appellant in reply, reference was made to the decision in Khetter Chunder Mookerjee v. Khetter Paul Sreeterutno (4) and it was contended that the certified copy was admissible without proof of execution of the original. Lord Collins in the course of his judgment first observed with regard to the deed of exchange that the certified copy was produced from the custody of Shahzadi Begum and was found to be written on paper bearing the same stamp and water marks as other documents on the record of that litigation; he then proceeded to state that their Lordships agreed with the District Judge that it was admissible in evidence and for the reasons given by him adopted his conclusions as to its genuineness. The learned Vakil for the appellant has contended that the only question before the Judicial Committee was, whether or not the certified copy was genuine and that their Lordships did not decide whether the certified copy, if genuine, could be received in evidence because the parties at the original trial had contended that there was a genuine original which had been lost, and the only question thus was whether what was produced as a certified copy was genuine or not. In our opinion it is clear from the report of the arguments before the Judicial Committee that the question of the admissibility of the certified copy was expressly raised before their Lordships and was treated by them as really not open to serious argument. But even if it be held that their Lordships assumed the document to be admissible because it was conceded that there was a genuine original, the case before us is not distinguishable from the one before the Judicial Committee, because the judgment of the District Judge shows that even according to the plaintiff there was a genuine original lease. Reference was made on behalf of the appellant to the decision of the House of Lords in Padwick v Wittcomb (9) to show that the certified copy would not be admissible, according to the rules of evidence recognised in English Law; that decision, however, is clearly distinguishable and is of no assistance to the appellant. On the other hand, the observations in Bullen v. Michel (10) undoubtedly support the view taken by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee [see also Wigmore on Evidence, Volume III, section 2143]. It is not necessary, however, to place reliance upon the rule of English Law on the subject; the question before us must be determined with reference to the statutory provisions contained in section 90 of the Indian Evidence Act; and in view of the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Shahzadi Begum v. Secretary of State (8), we must hold that the certified copy was properly received in evidence.

A second objection has been taken to the admissibility of this document. Our attention has been invited to section 18A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which was introduced by section 8 of Act I of 1907 (B. C.). That section provides that nothing contained in any instrument of transfer to which the landlord is not a party shall be evidence against the landlord of the permanence, amount or fixity of rent, area, transferability or any incident of any tenure or holding referred to in such instrument. In our opinion, this section is of no assistance to the appellant. If it be assumed that the section is applicable, it merely lays down that nothing contained in the instrument to which exception is taken can be used as evidence as against the landlord of the permanence of the tenure mentioned in such instrument. This does not prevent the use of the document for an entirely different purpose, namely, to show that there was an assertion by the tenure-holder at the time that his tenancy was of a particular description. Exhibit O (the dar mokarari patta) must, therefore, be treated as admissible in evidence.

The second document to which exception has been taken is a usufructuary mortgage-bond executed by Durbari Singh, the son of the original tenant, on the 8th March 1861. What has been produced is a certified copy of the document, and it contains an assertion by the executant that the property granted by way of usufructuary mortgage was his maurasi mokarari property and that it had been possessed by his father who made a dar-mokarari settlement thereof with the father of the mortgagee, referring obviously to the document of the 20th February 1830. We are of opinion, for the reasons already given, that the certified copy was admissible in evidence.

The third document to which exception has been taken is the record of a statement by the mother and step-mother of the predecessor of the plaintiff in 1861. It has been argued that the guardian of the person of the infant was not competent to bind the minor by an admission as to his property-rights, and in support of this view, reliance has been placed upon the cases of Brojendro Coomar Roy v. Chairman of the Dacca Municipality (11), Suruj Mookhi Konwar v. Bhagwati Konwar (12) and Ram Autar v. Mahammad Mumtaz Ali (13). In our opinion, it cannot be disputed that the guardians of the person of the infant were not competent to bind the ward by an admission of this character. The document, however, appears to have been used in the Court of first instance, not with a view to bind the plaintiff by the admission of the guardian, but for an entirely different purpose. The plaintiff himself produced a statement by the mother of the infant to the effect that Durbari Singh, the son of the original tenant, held merely as an ijaradar; it was with a view to contradict this statement that the defendants produced the statement to which exception has been taken. For this limited purpose, the document was undoubtedly receivable in evidence; but apparently, it has been used by the District Judge for a wider purpose. To this extent the judgment of the District Judge is open to criticism.

The fourth document to which exception is taken is a road cess return. The objection here is really not to the admissibility of the document but rather to its proof. The document bears the seal of the Raja; it is contended that the District Judge should also have compared what purports to be the signature of the Raja on the document with his signatures in certain documents which were produced at the trial and were more than 30 years old. In our opinion, the judgment of the District Judge is not open to criticism on this point. The aspect of the matter which has been presented here, was not placed before the District Judge, and the only question argued there was about the admissibility of the document; in that objection, there was no substance.

The fifth document to which exception is taken is the record of an admission by the Court of Wards, made apparently on behalf of the predecessor of the plaintiff when the estate was in charge of the Court. It cannot be seriously disputed that the admission by the Court of Wards cannot bind or prejudice the infant proprietor. But the judgment of the District Judge is not open to criticism on this ground, because he does not really base his conclusion upon the admission.

We may observe incidentally that some of the objections urged here were not taken, at least in the same form, in the Court below, but we have allowed them to be argued fully, partly from the importance of the questions raised, and partly in view of the principle that omission to take objection to the admission of a document which is absolutely inadmissible does not make it admissible in law: Miller v. Babu Madho Das (14), Girindra Chandra v. Ravendra Nath (15), Basawa v. Kalapa (16) and Oomatool Fatima v. Ghunnoo Singh (17).

The position, then, is that we have a document of 1830 in which the existence of the tenancy is recited. We have further a document of 1861 in which the factum of the tenancy is acknowledged by the grantor of the mortgage. It is true, the landlord was not a party to these transactions; but it is not disputed on his behalf that there was a tenancy in favour of Kanchan Singh and subsequently in favour of his son Durbari Singh. We have thus a tenancy of unknown origin, which has descended from father to son for three generations, has been effectively transferred from time to time and has been held at a uniform rent for at least 80 years from 1829 up to the date of the present suit. From these circumstances we are of opinion that the Court may legitimately infer that the tenancy in its inception was of a permanent character: Mohoram Sheikh Chaprasi v. Telamuddin Khan (18).

In this view it is not material to rely upon the documents to which objection has been successfully taken, namely, the admission made by the mother and step-mother of the infant in 1861, the statement in the road-cess return, and the statement in the sale certificate, which after all is merely the allegation of the decree-holder and cannot in any way be direct evidence against the landlord. Even if all these statements be left out of consideration, the circumstances already mentioned, which have been indisputably established, support the conclusion that the tenancy was of a permanent character. It is, consequently, needless to remand the case for further consideration.

The inference to be drawn is one of law from facts found or admitted: Mohoram Sheikh Chaprasi v. Telamuddin Khan (18); the facts established by the evidence legally admissible are sufficient to support the decree of the District Judge. But we desire to add that we do not in any way depart from the principle recognised by Sir Richard Garth, C. J., in Womes Chunder Chatterjee v. Chundee Churn Roy (19), which we hold does not apply to this case.

The result is that the decree of the District Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Estoppel—Institution of suit in Small Cause Court—Jurisdiction, objection to—Return of plaint for presentation to ordinary side—Order not appealed against—Revision against decree—Objection to jurisdiction, maintainability of.

Plaintiff instituted a suit on the Small Cause Side of the Munsif's Court. The defendant pleaded want of jurisdiction by the Small Cause Court and, on his objection, the Court returned the plaint for presentation on the ordinary side. Against the decree of the District Munsif, there was an appeal to the Subordinate Judge and against the appellate decree of the latter a revision petition was filed in the High Court. The defendant raised the objection in the High Court that the suit was of a small cause nature and that no appeal lay to the Subordinate Judge.

Held, that the defendant was estopped from raising the objection. [p. 830, col. 1.]

Appeal, under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment of Mr. Justice Bakewell, in Civil Revision Petition No. 113 of 1917, preferred to the High Court against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kumbakonam, in Appeal Suit No. 97 of 1916 (Original Suit No. 55 of 1915, on the file of the Court of the District Munsif, Tiruvalur.)

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The order for return of the plaint to the ordinary side was obtained at the instance of the defendant respondent. That order was not appealed against. Mr. Justice Bakewell should not have allowed him to turn round and state that the suit was of a Small Cause nature.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopalachariar, for the Respondent.—Jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent or pleadings of parties. Ledgard v. Bull (1), Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri (2) and Kollipara Seeta- paty v. Kankipaty Subbaya (3). Even assuming that the original order was proper, it cannot be said that consent or pleadings can create a substantive right of appeal.

At any rate, the suit is of a Small Cause nature and it has been held that the question of jurisdiction is not res judicata. See Subba Rao v. Perumal Reddy (4), Venku v. Mahalinga (5) and Kaveri Ammall v. Sastri Ramier (6). I am not estopped from objecting to the entertainment or disposal of the appeal.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—If you accept that the suit is properly instituted, then there is also appellate jurisdiction.]

See Rangoon Botatoung Co. Ltd. v. Collector of Rangoon (7). A right of appeal does not always follow. The law does not sanction a repetition of an error of law.

JUDGMENT.—We are constrained to differ from the learned Judge and to hold that the question of jurisdiction cannot be raised. The appellant before us presented his plaint on the Small Cause Side. The learned Judge allowed the present respondent to argue that no appeal from the decision of the District Munsif in the litigation that was initiated would lie, because the suit was of a Small Cause nature and the order of return for presentation on the ordinary side was wrong. The order was not appealed against and was obtained on respondent's objection. We do not think, and have been shown no authority, that he was entitled at a later stage to object to the jurisdiction, which he had himself designated as the proper one.

The learned Judge's decision is set aside and the civil revision petition remanded for re-hearing with reference to the other points taken in it. Costs to date will follow the result and be provided for in the order to be passed.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 71—Mortgage—Execution, proof of—Attestation, valid, what is—Recital as to consideration, value of—Burden of proof.

Where the execution of a mortgage has been proved in the manner prescribed by section 71 of the Evidence Act, and, on the face of it, it appears to have been executed in the presence of more persons than one, it is a good mortgage. [p. 831, col. 1.]

The recital in a mortgage-deed of the receipt of consideration is good prima facie evidence against an auction-purchaser just as it would be evidence against a purchaser by private treaty. [p. 831, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Meerut, dated the 21st December 1916, reversing that of the Sub-Judge, Meerut, dated the 29th June 1916.

FACTS.—This was a suit for sale on the basis of two mortgages. One mortgage was executed on the 14th December 1903 by defendant No. 1 and his brother, the father of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, and the deed was attested by five marginal witnesses; in form the mortgage combined a simple with a usufructuary mortgage. The second mortgage-deed was executed on the 6th December 1906 by defendant No. 1 for Rs. 490 and contained an acknowledgment of the receipt of the consideration by the mortgagor. Defendant No. 4 had purchased the equity of redemption and he alone contested the suit. He denied execution of the deeds according to law and their consideration.

To prove execution of the deed of the 14th December 1903 one only of the attesting witnesses was available and was produced by the plaintiff, the others were either dead or could not be found. This witness admitted his signature on the deed, but was unable to say whether the mortgagor signed in his presence; so far as he remembered the thumb-mark and the seal of the executant were already on the deed when he signed. The scribe was also produced; he stated that the mortgagor signed in his presence, but said nothing about the other witnesses having attested the deed. A third witness identified the signature of one of the witnesses who was dead.

In proof of the consideration of the deed of the 6th December 1906, the plaintiff produced evidence in respect of the various items which made up the consideration.

The trial Court held that the plaintiff had failed to prove due execution of the deed of 1903 and consideration for the deed of 1906, the recital in this latter deed as to consideration being in its opinion insufficient to shift the burden on to the contesting defendant. The suit was accordingly dismissed.

On appeal the lower Appellate Court took a contrary view of the evidence, and decreed the claim in full, holding that, having regard to sections 69 and 71 of the Evidence Act, due execution of the earlier deed was proved, and that the recital in the later deed proved consideration.

Defendant No. 4, contesting defendant, appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Appellant

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We think that the view taken by the Court below was correct. In the first place, we consider that under the circumstances the mortgage of 1903 was proved. We think that execution of the mortgage having been proved in the manner prescribed by section 71 of the Evidence Act, and on the face of it, it appearing to have been executed in the presence of more than one person, it was a good mortgage. The next contention was, that the mortgage being a usufructuary mortgage in form, the plaintiff could not recover the money. The mortgage was in a peculiar form and combined a simple mortgage with a usufructuary mortgage. As a matter of fact when the mortgage was made, possession could not be delivered because possession was already in the hands of a prior mortgagee, who is the appellant here and was the contesting defendant in the Court below. Furthermore the mortgagee himself purchased the equity of redemption and remained in possession, keeping the plaintiff out of possession. With regard to the consideration for the second mortgage, we think the Court of first instance was wrong in holding that the recital in the bond was not evidence against Narain Das (We assume that this is what he meant.) It is clear that if the acknowledgment in the bond was admissible against Narain Das, it was prima facie evidence against him and even if it stood alone, cast the onus upon the defendant of showing that the consideration failed in whole or in part. This was expressly decided in the case of Babbu v. Sita Ram (1). That case was an appeal under the Letters Patent from the decree of a learned Judge of this Court, who held that the acknowledgment in the mortgage was good prima facie evidence and a Bench of two Judges were unanimous in holding that the decision of the Single Judge was correct. Furthermore on the question as to whether or not the acknowledgment in the bond was admissible against the purchaser from the mortgagor we have the decision of the late Chief Justice Stanley and one of us. The case is Nawal Kunwar v. Bakhtawar Singh (2). We think that the acknowledgment is evidence against the auction-purchaser, just as it would be evidence, against a purchaser by private treaty. Of course it is possible that in different cases the value of the acknowledgment as evidence may vary, and possibly it may be more weighty against a purchaser by private contract than against an auction-purchaser, but it is clearly evidence against both. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Kumar SARAT KUMAR ROY—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act (I B.C. of 1895), ss. 10, 12, 15, 32—Certificate, execution of—Appeal against order in execution, dismissal of—Suit to recover amount levied—Limitation—Bengal Drainage Act (VI B C. of 1880), ss 2, 42, 44A, 50—Rent-free holder, whether tenure-holder—Payment by landholder—Right to recover payment from tenure-holders.

In execution of a certificate under the Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act the defendant realized from the plaintiff certain costs of drainage. When the certificate was filed and notice issued upon the plaintiff, he did not contest his liability. He took objection only when notice was served in proceedings taken to execute the certificate, and his objection was disallowed. He preferred an appeal, which was rejected. Then, within six months of the date on which the appeal against the order in the execution case had been disposed of, the plaintiff instituted this suit for refund of the amount realized from him in execution of the certificate:

Held, that as the suit was not brought within six months from the date of decision of an appeal from the original order of the Certificate Officer, the suit was barred by limitation under section 15 of the Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act. [p. 833, col. 2.]

A certificate under the Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act can be executed only after it has become final, and, so long as the certificate is not set aside, the judgment-debtor cannot get back the money recovered in execution of that certificate. [p. 833, col. 2]

A judgment-debtor cannot, by merely preferring an appeal against an order passed in execution of a certificate, get a fresh start of six months for bringing a suit under section 15 of the Public Demands Recovery Act. [p. 833, col. 2; p. 834, col. 1.]

A rent-free holder comes within the definition of tenure-holder in section 2 of the Bengal Drainage Act. [p. 834, col. 1.]

Under the Bengal Drainage Act the owner of an estate is primarily liable to the Collector for the apportioned sum in respect of the drainage costs, and a landholder who has made any payment in respect of lands which are held by tenure-holders immediately under him is, upon application to the Collector, entitled to recover the amount so paid. [p. 834, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Hooghly, dated the 30th May 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Court, Hooghly, dated the 30th August 1913.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mohendranath Roy (with him Babu Haradhan Chatterjee), for the Appellant.—As to maintainability of suit, refers to section 7 of Act I of 1895 (Public Demands Rrcovery Act). Refers to sections 8, 12, 15 and 32 of Act I of 1895. Section 32 gives the right of appeal. Under section 15 this suit is within time, having been brought within six months from the decision of appeal by the Collector. Reads sections 15 and 32. The third clause of section 15 is to be taken independently. I get the benefit of the third clause if I put in a petition of objection. This is substantially a suit for cancellation of certificate and refund of money. The proceedings of the certificate officer are without jurisdiction and so it was not necessary to sue for cancellation of the certificate at all The suit prayed for a relief and I would be within time under section 15. Under the Drainage Act, it is only a person who has been declared a landholder of a rent free tenure under section 50 that can file a certificate. Reads sections 51A, 51B and 51C of the Drainage Act. Defendant in this case has no right to proceed under the aforesaid sections. As to merits, I am neither lakheraj dar nor proprietor. I was wrongly recorded as landholder. That matter has not been decided.

Babu Bepin Behari Ghose (with him Babus Broja Lal Chuckerbutty and Mohesh Chandra Banerjee), for the Respondent.—The suit is not for cancellation or modification of a certificate. Under section 12 a judgment debtor may, within 30 days, file a petition of objection denying his liability. If the certificate officer rejects his application, he can apply to the Commissioner. Then he can come to the Civil Court for some relief. Appeal must be under section 12. Section is a general section of appeal. Section 15 does not mean to say from 'any order.' Section 15 has been wrongly interpreted by the other side. Refers to Barhamdeo Narayan Singh v. Bibi Rasul Bandi (1). In this case there is no prayer for the setting aside of the certificate, therefore he cannot say that it is such a suit. The suit is not maintainable. The certificate is not ultra vires: refers to section 30 of the Drainage Act. Plaintiff was responsible as he was landholder. He cannot recover money which he was bound Baba Haradhan Chatterjee replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for refund of certain costs of drainage, which have been realised from the plaintiff by the defendant in execution of a certificate under the Public Demands Recovery Act.

It appears that certain drainage works were constructed in the District of Howrah. The defendant is the owner of the estate within which Mauza Bali is included. The Commissioners appointed under the Bengal Drainage Act apportioned the costs of the drainage works between the proprietors, the tenure-holders and under tenure-holders and a sum of Rs. 947 was assessed upon certain lakheraj lands in Bali as the proportionate amount of drainage costs. The Collector realised this amount together with other sums payable in respect of the estate from the defendant. The defendant thereupon took steps to have the money realised from the plaintiff, under the certificate procedure. The certificate was filed and notice issued upon the plaintiff, but he did not contest his liability when the notice was served. Subsequently in proceedings which were taken to execute the certificate, the plaintiff took objection and the objection was disallowed. There was an appeal and the appeal was rejected on the 28th May 1912.

The present suit was instituted on the 30th August 1912. The suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance. On appeal the suit was decreed.

On second appeal the case was remanded for re-hearing the appeal after finding whether the plaintiff was declared to be the "landholder" in respect of the lakheraj lands in Bali within the meaning of section 50 of the Drainage Act.

The learned Subordinate Judge after remand has held that the suit is barred by limitation and that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover the amount from the defendant. It is also found that the Drainage Commissioners determined that the plaintiff was a landholder in respect of the lakheraj lands in Bali within the meaning of section 50 of the Act.

The plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

The first question for consideration is whether the suit is barred by limitation.

It is contended before us that the suit is not barred because section 15 of the Public Demands Recovery Act I of 1895 provides that a person deemed to be the judgment-debtor under the provisions of section 8 may, at any time within six months from the service upon him of notice under section 10, or if he files a petition of objection under section 12 from the date of the determination thereof, or if he appeals under section 32 from the date of the decision of such appeal, bring a suit in the Civil Court to have the said certificate cancelled or modified.

The plaintiff did not bring the suit within six months from the date of the service of notice under section 10, nor did he file a petition of objection under section 12. But the suit is within six months of the date on which the appeal which he filed against the order in the execution case had been disposed of. It is urged that as section 32 of the Act provides for an appeal from (among other things) any original order of a certificate officer other than the District Collector, an order in an execution case, if it is an original order of a certificate officer, is appealable under section 32 and as section 15 gives the period of six months from the date of decision of an appeal under section 32, the plaintiff's suit is not barred.

We are, however, unable to accept this construction of the section. The plaintiff has not asked for cancellation of the certificate. He has prayed for a declaration that the defendants' claim for realising the drainage charge was unjust and illegal. But so long as the certificate is not set aside, the plaintiff cannot get back the money recovered in execution of that certificate. Section 16 of the Public Demands Recovery Act provides that "when no suit is instituted by the judgment-debtor within the period specified in section 6 or section 15 or if any such suit having been instituted is finally decided against such judgment debtor, such certificate shall become absolute and shall have to all intents and purposes the same force and effect as a final decree of a Civil Court." A certificate, therefore, can be executed only after it has become final. We do not see how a judgment debtor can, by merely preferring an appeal against an order passed in execution of a certificate (and the certificate can be executed only after it has become final), get a fresh start of six months for bringing a suit under section 15 of the Act. Reading sections 15 and 1[illegible] together, we are of opinion that he cannot do so.

It is contended, however, that the whole proceeding is bad because the defendant had no right to realise the money from the plaintiff under the provisions of the Drainage Act.

It has been found that the Commissioners determined that the plaintiff was to be deemed the landholder in respect of lakheraj lands under section 50 of the Drainage Act.

Under section 28 of the Drainage Act, the Drainage Commissioners have to apportion costs of the drainage works among the several landholders and tenure-holders, and under section 30 of the Act the Commissioners are to declare whether the holders of the estate of the tenure or of the under-tenure shall be deemed to be the landholders liable to pay to the Collector the sum apportioned as payable in respect of such lands.

The defendant, who is the owner of the estate, appears to have been declared to be the landholder who was liable to pay the sum apportioned to the Collector in respect of the lakheraj lands of which the plaintiff was declared to be the landholder. The defendant was thus primarily liable to the Collector. The Collector realised from him the entire amount which was payable by the plaintiff in respect of the drainage costs. A rent-free holder comes within the definition of a tenure holder within the meaning of section 2 of the Act; and section 44 provides that any landholder who has made any payment in respect of lands which are held by tenure-holders immediately under him may, upon application to the Collector, be entitled to recover under the procedure prescribed by the Public Demands Recovery Act. The defendant did adopt that course and realised the amount from the plaintiff.

We think under the circumstances that the proceedings were not illegal or without jurisdiction.

That being so, the appeal fails and is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Section 76 (i) of the Transfer of Property Act has no application to money due for improvements to a mortgagee in Malabar, because the value of improvements effected by such mortgagee cannot be brought under the expression 'amount due on the mortgage' in section 83 of the Act. [p. 83 , col. 1.]

A mortgagee in Malabar has a right to remain in possession till he is actually paid or till he is ejected by decree of Court and hence he is not accountable for mesne profits till either of those events happens. [p. 835, col 1.]

According to the policy of the Act, the compensation is to be ascertained by the Court. Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Malabar at Calicut, in Appeals Suits Nos. 88 and 91 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Ottapalam, in Original Suit No. 372 of 1916.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The contentions as to the 1st defendant's (appellant mortgagee's) right to additional compensation for improvements

(that is, in addition to what has been awarded to him by the lower Court) raise questions of fact which we cannot entertain in second appeal.

The Subordinate Judge, however, was wholly unjustified in assuming that the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act were not in the minds of the Benches of this Court which decided Chami v. Ana Pattar (1) and Parameswara Ayyan v. Kittunni Valia Mannadiar (2) and in awarding mesne profits to plaintiff after the date of the tender made in Court by the respondents under section 83 of Act IV of 1882. Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar does refer to section 83 of that Act in his judgment in the former case. Section 76 (i) refers to section 83 by using the words "in manner hereinafter provided" and the language of the two sections (one speaking of "the amount for the time being due on the mortgage" and the other "the amount remaining due on the mortgage") is very similar when referring to the mortgagee's right to be paid his money before redemption.

Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar clearly says in Chami v. Ana Pattar (1) that he agreed with the appellant's Vakil in that case "that the value of improvements cannot be brought under the expression 'amount due on the mortgage' in section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act." It follows that section 76, clause (i), also has no application to the money due for improvements to a Malabar mortgagee.

Nothing that has been advanced by the respondent's learned Vakil in the arguments in this case has tended to throw any doubt on the opinion I expressed in Parameswara Ayyan v. Kittunni Valia Mannadiar (2) that the mortgagee in Malabar has a right to remain in possession till he is actually paid or till he is ejected by decree of Court, and hence that he is not accountable for mesne profits till either of these events happens. The Legislature cannot have intended to make a mortgagee tenant liable for mesne profits on tender but not a lessee tenant, which would be the result if the respondent's contention is accepted, section 5 of the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act making no difference between a mortgagee tenant and a tenant holding on a mere Verumpattam or on a mere Kuzhikanom right.

The lower Court's decrees will, therefore, be modified by striking out of the first Court's decree the words beginning with "and future mesne profits" and ending with "from this date."

The parties will bear their respective costs in this second appeal.

NAPIER, J.—I agree with the decision in Parameswara Ayyan v. Kittunni Valia Mannadiar (2). The matter seems to me to be concluded by the language of section 5 of the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act. That section seems to apply to all tenants except such as have been paid. If payment has been made and the term is determined or the mortgage has been discharged, the section has no application. If the compensation is so due that is, has not been paid, then the section applies. The Legislature could have added the words "or a proper sum tendered" but has not thought fit to do so, although in the same section it speaks of payment or tender of the mortgage money. We are asked to import section 76 (i) of the Transfer of Property Act. I agree with Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in Chami v. Ana Pattar (1) that this does not apply and I further think that if it was to be applied, it would introduce a special rule in cases of mortgages while another rule based on the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act remained for leases, which constitute a number of cases in which compensation has to be paid. I am unable to follow Seshagiri Aiyar, J.'s reasoning at the end of his judgment in Chami v. Ana Pattar (1), as I do not understand his reference to clause 2 of section 5 of the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act. The Act may operate against the landlord in some cases but that can be dealt with in Court. It must also be borne in mind that according to the policy of the Act the compensation is to be ascertained by the Court; vide section 19 of the Act. If a tenant accepts payment he waives his right, but if he claims assessment by the Court, I can see nothing in the Act which deprives him of his statutory right under

A lessor is bound to secure to the lessee the possession of the land leased with reference to its intended use which was made known to him at the time when the lease was granted, and if he is unable to secure possession to the lessee with reference to the use he wanted to make of it, he is liable to refund any money which he may have received from the lessee.

Revision against the decree of the Munsif, Fyzabad, on Small Cause Court Side, dated the 10th January 1919.

Mr. S. N. Roy, for the Applicant.

Babu Rudra Datt Sinha, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT —The defendant owned some land within the Municipal limits of Fyzabad. He let out the land to the plaintiff for the purpose of its being used for the sale of fire-wood. He received Rs 48 in advance from the plaintiff. When the plaintiff applied to the Municipal Board for permission to use the land for the purpose aforesaid, the Municipal Board refused to grant the necessary sanction. He then asked the defendant to return the amount he had paid him and, on the latter refusing to do so, filed a suit for the recovery of the said money which the Court below dismissed. The finding of the Court below was that the evidence produced by the plaintiff in support of an agreement that money would be refunded in case the permission was not granted by the Municipal Board was contradictory.

It is obvious, however, that apart from any agreement which may have been entered into between the parties, the lessor was bound to secure to the plaintiff the possession of the land leased with reference to its intended use which was made known to him at the time when the lease was granted, and if he was unable to secure possession to the lessee with reference to the use he wanted to make of it, he is liable to refund the money which he had received. In other words, the lessee is entitled in consequence of the failure of the lessor to secure possession of the disputed land to have the payment made by him refunded.

The application is, therefore, allowed and the claim of the plaintiff-appellant decreed for the recovery of Rs. 48 with costs here and hitherto. The defendant will bear his own costs throughout.

BADRI PARSAD SINGH v. ANPURNA KUAR.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is connected with Second Appeals Nos 103 and 104 of 1917. They arise out of suits for profits brought against the Lambardar. It appears that the plaintiffs purchased a certain share on the 22nd of January 1912, and that under their purchase they were entitled to arrears of profits. The defendant was appointed Lambardar on the 5th of February 1913. The plaintiffs claim profits for Kharif of 1320 and Rabi and Kharif in subsequent years. The Court of first instance granted the plaintiff a decree except in respect of Kharif of 1320. The plaintiff appealed and contended that the expenses allowed by the first Court were too great and that the percentage on the gross rental allowed to him was too little. He also contended that he ought to have got a decree in respect of the Kharif of 1320. The lower Appellate Court upheld the decision of the Court of first instance on all points and dismissed the appeals. We may say at once that we agree with the Courts below, save in so far as they dismissed the plaintiff's claim in respect of the Kharif of 1320. The ground upon which both the Courts dismissed the plaintiff's claim in respect of Kharif of 1320 was because the defendant had not been appointed Lambardar when the rents of Kharif 1320 fell due. This view is, in our opinion, not correct. If the defendant after he had become Lambardar collected the rents for Kharif 1320, he would be liable to the plaintiffs notwithstanding that he had not been appointed Lambardar when the rents actually fell due. If he had actually realised the rents, he would be liable for the amount so realised. If he had only recovered decrees, he would be liable for the amount realised under those decrees or for the ascertained value of the decrees. Before deciding the appeals we refer the following issues to the Court below:—

(1) Did the defendant realise any sums, and if so, how much in respect of Kharif 1320. Were these sums realised after he had been appointed Lambardar?

(2) Did the defendant obtain decrees after he had become Lambardar in respect of Kharif 1320? If so, how much has been realised on foot of these decrees or might by reasonable diligence have been realised?

(3) As the result of the findings on these issues, how much, if anything, is due to the plaintiffs in respect of their shares of the Kharif of 1320?

The parties may adduce evidence relevant to these issues. On receipt of the findings the usual ten days will be allowed for filing objections.

Issues remitted.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s 90—Will 30 years old—Presumption—Registration, effect of.

JUDGMENT.

DANIELS, A. J. C.—This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration that the plaintiffs are not bound by certain documents executed by their father Babu Sarju Narain Singh. It was necessary for the success of the plaintiffs' case that the property should be ancestral property in which they acquired an interest by birth. This issue has been found against them and is the sole question argued before us in this appeal. It has been found that the plaintiffs acquired the property under a Will executed by their father on 2nd December 1885, exactly three years before his death. Three pleas have been pressed:—

(1) that the Will is not proved,

(2) that the testator was not of sound disposing mind, and

(3) that the testator's Will is invalid by reason of the testator's estate having been under the charge of the Court of Wards.

The Will was indirectly admitted by the plaintiffs themselves, who included it in their list of documents, gave the date of it, and undertook to produce it on the date of hearing. On the date of issues, however, they stated that they had been unable to find any trace of the Will and they accordingly denied that they derived their title to the property from it. The defendant thereupon produced a certified copy obtained from the registration department. The Will having been duly registered and the document being over thirty years old, the learned Subordinate Judge presumed its genuineness under section 90 of the Evidence Act. There is evidence going to show that the Will was acted upon inasmuch as the village of Arsa Azampur, which alone of all the property possessed by the testator was not given to his sons but was reserved to the testator's widow for her maintenance, is proved to have been in possession of the widow after the testator's death. On this issue we find that the learned Subordinate Judge was fully justified in presuming the genuineness of the Will. On the second issue the appellants produced certain oral evidence, chiefly consisting of highly interested witnesses, to show that the testator was insane. The learned Subordinate Judge did not believe this evidence and points out that reliable evidence which easily might have been called, such as the medical man who is said to have attended the testator, was not called. In another place the Subordinate Judge says that at the utmost the evidence could be taken as proving that the testator was liable to fits of insanity. On the other side we have the fact that the Will was registered, which in itself raises a presumption that the testator was of sound mind. Had he not been so, it was the duty of the registering officer under section 35 of the Registration Act to refuse to register. We have also the fact that the original Will, which is presumably in the custody of the plaintiffs has not been produced and, therefore, the Court may make any presumption regarding it unfavourable to them. Finally we have the evidence of a respectable witness Babu Manohar Lal, Vakil, that the deceased used to engage him professionally and that he had occasion to see him and meet him very frequently and that he never found him mad. If the evidence of insanity produced by the appellants is disbelieved, as I think it must be, very slight evidence of sound disposing mind on the part of the testator is sufficient and the evidence which is forthcoming is sufficient. On the third issue it has not been proved that the estate was under the Court of Wards at the time of the execution of the Will. The appellants rely on vague oral statements of the same witnesses who depose as to insanity. None of the witnesses is at all precise as to the time when the estate is said to have been taken over. The taking over of the estate by the Court of Wards is a fact which could easily have been proved by unimpeachable documentary evidence. None such evidence is forthcoming. It is, therefore, not strictly necessary to consider whether under section 173 of Act XVII of 18 6, which was then in force, a Will by a Ward of the Court would be invalid. Under the first Court of Wards Act (III of 1899) as well as under the present Act (U. P. Act IV of 19 2) there is a definite prohibition, subject to certain qualifications, against a widow making a Will without the consent of the Court of Wards, though it is provided that that consent should not be withheld from any reasonable Will. Under Act XVII of 187 there was no such prohibition. Section 173, as it stood, runs as follows:—

"Persons whose property is under the superintendence of the Court of Wards shall not be competent to create, without the sanction of the Court, any charge upon or interest in such property or any part thereof."

The appellants' argument is that the word "interest" refers to an interest either in the present or in the future. The respondent relies that the question of a Will was never in contemplation The jurisdiction of the Court of Wards over the estate ceased with the death of the widow. A Will could create no vested interest, and any interest which arose under it could only arise after the charge of the Court of Wards had ceased. We have been referred to no reported case in which the word has been interpreted. Had it been intended to interfere with the statutory power of making a Will which had been conferred on Taluqdars by Act I of 1869, it is probable that this would have been done by express words and not left to be inferred from a general impression such as creating an interest. Having regard to these considerations and to the general scope and object of the Act, I am of opinion that section 173 (Act XVII of 1876) did not deprive a ward of the power of making a Will where he was otherwise entitled to do so. The appeal fails on all grounds and it is accordingly dismissed with costs.

KANHAIYA LAL, J. C.—The plaintiffs are the sons of Sarju Narain Singh. On the 3rd December 1871 Bhola Nath Singh and Sarju Narain Singh executed a deed of possessory mortgage in favour of the defendant and three other persons for Rs. 90,000 in respect of the property mentioned in List A appended to the plaint. On the 29th June 1892 they executed 5 deeds of further charge in favour of the same persons for a total sum of Rs. 18,582 11 11, hypothecating the said property along with some other villages. The original owner of the properties mortgaged was Mahip Narain Singh, the Taluqdar of Chandapur Birhar, whose name was entered at No. 143 in List 1 and No. 58 in List III, appended to Act I of 1869. On the 2nd May 1871 Mahip Narain Singh made a gift of the said properties in favour of his son, Sudisht Narain Singh, who died in 1888 leaving two sons Bhola Nath Singh and Sarju Narain Singh. Sudisht Narain is said to have executed a Will bequeathing his property to his sons. The plaintiffs impeach the genuineness and validity of that Will and question the right of their father to deal with the property to the prejudice of their rights. They allege that the property mortgaged was ancestral property, that their father was addicted to the use of intoxicating drugs and that the deeds of further charge were obtained by the defendant by the exercise of undue influence without the payment of any consideration. They further allege that there was no legal necessity for the said loans and that they were not bound by the decree obtained by the defendant on the said deeds or by the sale held in execution thereof. The defendant purchased at that sale. Her plea was that the property mortgaged in the deeds of further charge was self-acquired property in the hands of Bhola Nath Singh and Sarju Narain Singh, inasmuch as it was obtained by virtue of the bequest above mentioned. The Court below accepted that contention and dismissed the claim. It is admitted that the plaintiffs live jointly with their father, Sarju Narain Singh, and that Bhola Nath Singh and Sarju Narain Singh were separate in mess, residence and estate before the dates of the mortgages in question. The gift made by Mahip Narain Singh being admitted, the only question for consideration is whether Sudisht Narain Singh made a Will by which he bequeathed the said property and such under proprietary rights as he subsequently acquired in favour of his sons, Bhola Nath Singh and Sarju Narain Singh. The genuineness of the Will was admitted by the plaintiffs in the list filed by them with the plaint. It was there stated that the original Will executed by Sudisht Narain Singh in favour of Bhola Nath Singh and others on the 2nd December 1885 would be filed at the time of the first hearing. The plaintiffs have presumably the Will in their possession but they have chosen not to file it. On the date fixed for the settlement of issues, the defendant stated that she relied on that Will. She produced a certified copy of it during the progress of the hearing. The Court below admitted the certified copy in evidence, presuming it to be genuine because the original document was registered and over 30 years old. Having regard to the admission made by the plaintiffs in the list filed by them with the plaint and the fact of registration, the Court below was justified in presuming the genuineness of the original and admitting the certified copy in evidence in proof of its contents. The Will was executed on the 2nd December 1885. Sudisht Narain Singh died on the 2nd December 1883. There was no allegation that the Will had been revoked and the mere fact that on the death of Sudisht Narain Singh mutation of names was effected in respect of the property left by him in favour of Bhola Nath Singh and Sarju Narain Singh on the ground of inheritance does not signify that there was no subsisting Will then in existence. It is not uncommon to find people applying for mutation of names describing themselves as the heirs of the deceased proprietor, whether they get the property by inheritance or bequest. If the right by inheritance is clear, any documents of alternative title which the applicants may have are seldom produced unless there is a contest; and if there is a contest, the question of possession largely influences the result. It is urged on behalf of the plaintiffs that it was at all events incumbent on the defendant to show by positive evidence that the testator was possessed of sound testamentary capacity to execute the Will and that he executed it with a full knowledge of its contents. An attempt has been made on their behalf to produce evidence suggesting that Sudisht Narain Singh was addicted to dhatura and other intoxicating drugs and that from 10 or 12 years prior to his death he had been suffering from insanity. The witnesses adduced on the point are, however, interested and they have been rightly disbelieved by the Court below. No medical evidence has been adduced, though Sudisht Narain Singh is said to have been under the treatment of a person named Bhagdu Ram. The evidence of Babu Manohar Lal, a Pleader of Fyzabad, shows that Sudisht Narain Singh used to take loans from him from time to time and engaged him in his cases, that he had occasion to see him and meet him very frequently and that he never found him mad. He was a man of religious habits and the testamentary disposition made by him was quite natural. The Will was registered. As pointed out in Gangamoyi Debi v. Troiluckhya Nath Chowdhry (1), the registration of a document is a solemn act performed in the presence of a competent official whose duty it is to attend the parties during the registration and see that the provisions laid down by law as to the capacity of the person registering the document are complied with. Under section 35 of the Indian Registration Act (III of 1877), then in force, the document would not have been registered, had the testator shown any signs of insanity at the time. The presumption, therefore, is against the plaintiffs who have failed to establish the allegations made by them.

The Will is valid and enforceable and the property which the father of the plaintiffs acquired by virtue of it cannot be treated as property in which the plaintiffs had any interest by birth. The family possessed no other property or nucleus from which any subsequent acquisitions could have been made. The entire property was thus the self-acquired property of Sudisht Narain Singh, who had full power of disposal over it. There is nothing to show that it was thrown into the joint stock, if any such stock existed, or that the plaintiffs were allowed any control over its income. The plaintiffs have, therefore, no right of suit. It is suggested that the estate of Sudisht Narain Singh was in charge of the Court of Wards when he executed the said Will; but no satisfactory evidence has been adduced on the point. If the estate had been in charge of the Court of Wards at or about the time when the Will was executed, evidence would have been easily obtained from the records of the Court of Wards to establish that fact. The vague statement made by the witnesses for the plaintiffs on the point cannot be trusted. Section 163 of Act XVII of 1876, then in force, empowered the Deputy Commissioner to enquire whether a person was disqualified to manage his estate and to declare him to be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court of Wards.

No such declaration has been produced or referred to. In fact on an enquiry made from the Board of Revenue it has since been ascertained that the Court of Wards did not actually take possession of the estate of Sudisht Narain Singh till 1887. It is unnecessary in the circumstances to consider whether section 173 of Act XVII of 1876 is applicable to testamentary dispositions made by a disqualified proprietor which were to take effect after the Court of Wards ceased on his death to hold charge of his property.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Musammat HUSAIN BI—PLAINTIFF AND Musammat GHULAM BI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 29, 30, 31—Sale by guardian with permission of Court, validity of—Necessity, want of—Fraud.

A sale, with the permission of the Court, effected by a duly certificated guardian of the property of his ward, cannot be impeached by the ward on the ground that there was no necessity for it, and, unless the Court's permission was obtained by fraud, such a sale transfers a good title to the vendee [p. 842, col 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 21st October 1914.

Messrs. Govind Das and Parduman Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff Husain Bi has sued for her share, by the Muhammadan Law, in two houses and some land left by her father Karam Bakhsh. The first Court gave her a decree, which the learned District Judge has upheld. A second appeal has been preferred to this Court by three of the defendants in regard only to one house, which has been designated as house A.

This house was sold on the 19th August 1901, after the deaths of Karam Bakhsh and his son Allah Bakhsh, by the latter's widow Ghulam Bi defendant No. 1, who had on the 21st July 1900 been appointed by the District Judge to be guardian of the persons and property both of her own sons and of the plaintiff and Nur Jan, who were Allah Bakhsh's half-sisters. The sale was effected for Rs. 1,000 in favour of defendant No. 5, who sold the house on the 6th September 1901 to defendant No. 6 and the father of defendants Nos. 7 and 8, and defendant No. 6 sold his share in 1909 to defendants Nos. 9, 10 and 11. The appellants in this Court are defendants Nos. 8, 9 and 11.

The plaintiff contests the validity of the sale effected by her guardian Ghulam Bi in 1901, on the ground that there was no necessity for it. Ghulam Bi had obtained the permission of the District Judge to sell the house on the 9th February 1901, and the first Court found that she had the benefit of the minors in view, but instead of dismissing the suit in regard to this house it passed a decree for the whole of the property claimed without giving any reasons for so doing.

The lower Appellate Court finds that the District Judge's permission for the sale was given in consequence of misrepresentation on the part of Ghulam Bi. In her application of the 19th February 1900 for being appointed guardian of the minors, Ghulam Bi described the plaintiff and Nur Jan as the daughters of Allah Bakhsh (her husband) and in the order appointing her as guardian the District Judge spoke of her as being the mother of the minors, and said that no one could be a better guardian than the mother. The lower Appellate Court concludes that the District Judge was misled by Ghulam Bi wrongly representing herself to be the mother of the minors Husain Bi and Nur Jan, and that if he had not been misled he would not have appointed her to be their guardian. The Court has, therefore, held that the order appointing her as guardian and the order sanctioning the sale of the house were obtained by misrepresentation, and that there was thus no valid permission for the sale. On this ground it has maintained the first Court's decree.

The lower Appellate Court has, however, overlooked an important document on the file of the guardianship case, namely, an application, dated the 29th April 1900, which Ghulam Bi put in on the 9th June 1900, in which she asked that she might be appointed guardian of her sons and of her husband's sisters. This shows that she can have had no intention of deceiving the Court. Although it has not been explained why she described Husain Bi and Nur Jan in her first application as the daughters of Allah Bakhsh, and not as her sisters-in-law, it is very probable that the reason was that they had been living with her and Allah Bakhsh and had been treated by them as though they were their own daughters. It is at any rate clear from the application which she made on the 9th June 1900 that no fraud was committed by her. The District Judge had also before him, when he appointed Ghulam Bi to be the guardian of the minors, the written statement of the collaterals of Karam Bakhsh in which they referred to Husain Bi and Nur Jan as Karam Bakhsh's daughters.

Even if what was said by Ghulam Bi in her second application and by the collaterals in their written statement escaped the notice of the District Judge in 1900, and he was misled by Ghulam Bi's first application and thought that Husain Bi and her sister were Ghulam Bi's daughters, this would not affect the validity of the appointment of Ghulam Bi as guardian. It is to be observed that Karam Bakhsh's collaterals had not discriminated between Ghulam Bi's children and the children of Karam Bakhsh, but objected to Ghulam Bi being appointed guardian of the property of any of them, and it is doubtful whether if the Judge had known that Husain Bi and Nur Jan were not Ghulam Bi's daughters but her sisters-in-law, he would have passed a different order. But in any case the appointment of Ghulam Bi as guardian would hold good, as section 48 of Act VIII of 1890 provides that an order made under the Act shall be final (subject to any order that may be passed by the High Court in appeal or revision) and shall not be liable to be contested by suit or otherwise.

Further, the order of the 9th February 1901, by which Ghulam Bi was given permission to sell the house, was not the result of any fraud, and was a valid order. It was held in Jadu Nath Achariya v. Tarak Chandra (1) that a sale by a certificated guardian of the property of his ward with the permission of the Court transfers a good title to the vendee unless the Court's permission was obtained by fraud, and a similar view was taken in Sikher Chund v. Dulputty Singh (2) and by the Privy Council in Gangapershad Sahu v. Maharani Bibi (3). The case of the appellants is all the stronger as they are not the original purchasers from the guardian.

Following the authorities mentioned above, we hold that the plaintiff cannot impeach the sale which was effected by her guardian with the permission of the Court, and that the claim for a share in house A, therefore, fails.

We accept the appeal and modify the decree so far as to dismiss the claim for a share in house A, the decree for the rest of the property in suit being maintained. The plaintiff will pay the appellants' costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

MEENAKSHIAMMAL, MINOR, BY HER MATERNAL GRANDMOTHER AND GUARDIAN THANGATHAMMAL—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Debt due by husband for wife's stridhanam—Wife in possession of husband's assets after husband's death—Appropriation of debt—Testamentary bequest of debt—Intention to keep debt alive—Right of legatee—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 101—Merger, doctrine of, applicability of.

CHIDAMBARAM PILLAI v. MEENAKSHIAMMAL.

A Hindu died leaving a widow and a daughter born of a former wife and about Rs. 25,000. The widow was a creditor to her husband's estate to the extent of Rs. 478 for her stridhanam. Shortly before her death, she made a Will devising this debt to the plaintiff, who sued to recover the amount from the daughter who succeeded to the estate after the widow's death. The suit was dismissed on the ground that the widow having become possessed of assets whereby she could have paid off her debt, the debt became extinguished:

Held, (1) that the widow's possession of the assets did not amount to a payment of her stridhanam debt, there being no analogy between executors who are creditors to the estate paying their debts out of the estate, and a widow who is entitled to enjoy the whole of the income of the estate; [p. 844, cols. 1 & 2.]

(2) that the widow's stridhanam not being at law a charge or incumbrance within the meaning of section 101 of the Transfer of Property Act, there was no merger because in the case of a limited owner the presumption was against merger. [p. 844, col. 2; p. 845, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tinnevelly, in Small Cause Suit No. 276 of 1917.

This petition coming on for hearing on the 20th February 1918, the Court made the following

ORDER.—Before I can dispose of the point of law raised in this petition, it is necessary to know:—

(1) Whether the debt of Rs. 478 from Nellayappa Pillai to his wife Velammal was stridhanam in the hands of the latter?

(2) Whether Nellayappa Pillai at his death was possessed of sufficient assets for the discharge of this debt from his estate?

(3) Whether Velammal did any act denoting an intention of satisfying the debt due to her out of her husband's estate?

The Subordinate Judge is requested to return findings on these issues within six weeks after adducing evidence.

Ten days will be allowed for filing objections to the finding after notice of return of the same shall have been posted up in this Court.

In compliance with the above order, the Subordinate Judge submitted the following

FINDING.—I have been directed to submit my finding on the following points:—

(1) Whether the debt of Rs. 478 from Nellayappa Pillai to his wife Velammal was stridhanam in the hands of the latter?

(2) Whether Nellayappa Pillai at his death was possessed of sufficient assets for the discharge of this debt from his estate?

(3) Whether Velammal did any act denoting an intention of satisfying the debt due to her out of her husband's estate?

2. 1st issue.—The account (Exhibit A 1) has sufficiently been proved to be a genuine account. The witness called on the defendant's side admits that the entries at page 6 of Exhibit A-1 up to 10th Karthigai are in the hand of Velammal's husband Nellayappa Pillai himself. He also admits that the last item (receipt of Rs. 100 in Velammal's favour) found at page 96 of the account (Exhibit A-1) is in the hand of Nellayappa Pillai. In that page balance from page 6 has been brought forward. Hence there can be no doubt as to the truth of the debt itself. P. W. No. 1 swears that the debt is Velammal's stridhanam and there is no evidence contra. The fact that her husband has opened a separate ledger in her name shows that it is her separate property.

3. 2nd issue.—It is admitted that Nellayappa Pillai left assets to the extent of Rs. 25,000 at his death.

4. 3rd issue.—There is no evidence that Velammal did any act indicating an intention of satisfying the debt out of her husband's estate.

This civil revision petition came for final hearing on the 3rd October 1918, after the return of the finding of the lower Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial.

Mr. N. Kunjithapadam Aiyar, for the Petitioner.—The Subordinate Judge erred in holding that the debt due to the widow was extinguished by her becoming the owner of her husband's estate. The analogy of executors does not apply. The estate of a testator vests in the executor for purposes of administration and he can deal with it as he pleases. The case of a Hindu widow is different.

There is evidence that the widow intended to keep the debt alive. The fact that she bequeathed the debt is evidence of such intention. The widow is entitled to enjoy the entire income of her husband's estate.

There is no merger. The only statutory merger is contained in section 101 of the Transfer of Property Act. Under that section where the owner of a charge or incumbrance becomes entitled to the property, the charge shall be extinguished. The stridhanam is not a charge.

Mr K. V Sesha Aiyangar, for the Respondent.—The possession of assets by the widow amounts to payment of her debt. The widow was in possession of the income of her husband's property out of which she could have paid her husband's debt to her.

The debt has become merged.

JUDGMENT.—The facts necessary to be stated for the disposal of the question of law raised in this petition are these. One Nellayappa Pillai died in January 1915 leaving a widow and a daughter born of a former wife; also about Rs. 25,000 assets. The widow was a creditor of her husband's estate to the extent of Rs. 473 which he owed her for her stridhanam. In January 1916 the widow made a Will devising this debt of Rs. 473 to the plaintiff and died shortly after. The plaintiff brought this suit to recover the amount from the daughter, who succeeded to the estate of her father after the widow's death. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that it was not maintainable on the ground that, by the widow becoming possessed of assets whereby she could have paid off her own debt, the debt became extinguished. For this proposition he relied upon certain observations occurring in Husainara Begum v. Rahmannessa Begum (1) and in Chitty on Contract, page 774 (4th Edition). In the former, which was a case of a mortgagee appointed as administrator of his mortgagor's estate, it was stated that possession of assets amounts to payment on the principle that there is an extinguishment of the debt if the person who is to receive the money is also the person who ought to pay, reference being made to Williams on Executors, 10th Edition, Volume I, page 1058, and to Wankford v. Wankford (2). These deal with the case of a debtor making a creditor his sole executor and leaving assets which come into that executor's hands. It is not alleged in this case that Nellayappa Pillai made his widow his executor in law or that she took out Letters of Administration to his estate. The principle which applies to executors does not extend to widows as such. A Hindu widow succeeding to her husband's estate is in a different position from an executor. This has often been pointed out. I will cite only one of the recent decisions of the Calcutta High Court: Sudhir Chandra Das v. Kamal Chandra Dutta (3), where the position of an executor was defined by Chitty, J., in the following and other words: "It was argued that, as a widow or a guardian of a minor or shebait was a manager, therefore, an executor, who was also a manager, stood in the same position. The argument is obviously fallacious. The analogy is in no sense complete, and the cases which deal with the peculiar powers of widows, guardians or shebaits have really no bearing upon the present question * * * * * An executor under Statute is the legal representative of a deceased person for all purposes and all the property of the deceased person vests in him as such. * * * * * * * * * The executor is, therefore, in many respects in a different position from a Hindu widow succeeding to her husband's estate, a guardian of a minor, or a shebait of an idol. The estate of the testator is absolutely vested in the executor for the purposes of administration and he can deal with it as he pleases, subject, of course, to the responsibility for the due administration of the estate."

An attempt has been made to support the Subordinate Judge's decision by invoking the doctrine of merger. In this country the only statutory merger is that created by section 10, Transfer of Property Act, which runs thus:—"Where the owner of a charge or other incumbrance on immoveable property is or becomes absolutely entitled to that property, the charge or incumbrance shall be extinguished unless he declares, by express words or necessary implication, that it shall continue to subsist, or such continuation would be for his benefit."

Now the widow's stridhanam in the present suit was at law not a charge or incumbrance within the meaning of this section, as it was not attached to any land. Again, in equity the question of merger is one of intention, the presumption being that a person having a right to act in one of two ways is assumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to have acted according to his interest: Vide Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Puranmal Premsukh Das (4). In the case of a limited owner the presumption is against merger, as it is not for his or her advantage that the charge should sink for the benefit of the remainderman (Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XIII, page 147). It is not for the advantage of a widow to pay off her stridhanam debt out of the income of her husband's estate as she is entitled to enjoy the whole of the income of the estate. The obligation she is under to discharge her husband's debts is a religious and a moral obligation. Moreover, if intention is to be gathered from circumstances, the inference in this case is that the debt was intended to be kept alive, for not only has the Subordinate Judge found on the third issue remanded to him that there was no evidence that the widow did any act indicating an intention of satisfying the debt out of her husband's estate, but the very fact of her making a Will bequeathing the debt to the plaintiff denotes an intention on her part to keep it alive. On this preliminary point the Subordinate Judge's decision must, therefore, be reversed and the suit will be remanded for disposal on the other issues arising in the case. Costs will abide and follow the result.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

Custom—Alienation—Reversioners cultivating portion of land sold during lifetime of alienor, effect of—Estoppel.

The fact that the reversioners of a vendor cultivate a portion of the land sold, during his lifetime, as tenants of the vendee, does not operate to estop them, on the death of the vendor, from contesting the sale by suing for possession.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 8th December 1914.

Shaikh Umar Bakhsh, for the Appellants.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit by reversioners for possession of land, 59 kanals 18

marlas in area, which was sold in 1878 by Sultani Khan and Bibi Sahibu, his sister in-law, jointly. Bibi Sahibu died in December 1908 and Sultani Khan had predeceased her. The Courts below have dismissed the suit, holding that as the plaintiffs during the lifetime of Bibi Sahibu cultivated a portion of the land sold to the vendees, as tenants of the vendees, that circumstance taken together with 35 years' silence estopped the plaintiffs from challenging the sale.

The plaintiffs come here in second appeal and though we cannot agree, inasmuch as during the lifetime of Bibi Sahibu the plaintiffs could not sue for possession, that cultivation by them as tenants of part of the land operates as an estoppel against them, still we hold that the appeal must fail, for from the evidence on the record it is quite clear to us that the sale was for consideration and necessity. The consideration for the sale consisted of an earlier mortgage, the interest on that mortgage and a bond, registered, of 1874 for Rs. 280. That bond itself arose out of an earlier bond of 1865 and that again was based upon an earlier bond, registered also, of 1865. Moreover we find that the mutation in 1883 was attested by Amir Khan, who was father of some of the plaintiffs and brother of others.

For these reasons we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Res judicata—Decree against limited owner, whether binds remainderman—Transferee from remainderman—Possession, suit for Limitation, commencement of.

In 1867 FS made a Will bequeathing his property to his widow with remainder to her daughter. In 1878 CB sued the widow alone to recover the property, basing his claim on an earlier Will He was granted a decree and obtained possession of the property. In 1879 the widow and her daughter gifted the property to C who sold his rights to the present plaintiff. On the death of the widow the plaintiff brought the present suit against the representatives of CB. to recover possession of the property, but the suit was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff was bound by the decision in the suit brought by CB. against the widow, and that it was barred by limitation. The plaintiff appealed:

Held, (1) that the suit was not barred by the rule of res judicata, inasmuch as the widow did not fully represent the estate, and that, therefore, the decision in the suit brought by CB. was not binding on her daughter nor on the plaintiff who claimed through the latter, [p. 846, col. 2.]

(2) that the suit was not barred by limitation, inasmuch as the only interest which C. obtained in the property by the gift in his favour was the vested remainder of the daughter, and as the latter could not have brought a suit until her mother's death, the cause of action for the present suit arose when the mother died. Messrs. A. P. Sen, Jiban Krishna Banerjee, S. C. Gputa and Nripendranath Datt, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Mohammad Wasim and Imtiaz Ali, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts necessary to be stated for the decision of this appeal are as follows :—

Certain property belonged to Fateh Singh who died in 1867. In 1876 he made a Will bequeathing the property to his wife Musammat Mahadei, with remainder to her daughter Musammat Paraga. In 1878 one Chandra Bali brought a suit for recovery of the property against Musammat Mahadei, basing his claim on a Will executed by Fateh Singh in 1866. Musammat Paraga was not a party to that suit. Chandra Bali obtained a decree against Musammat Mahadei and he and his successors have been in possession of the property since 1878. In 1879 Musammat Mahadei and her daughter Musammat Paraga executed a deed of gift of the property mentioned in the Will of 1867 in favour of one Chandika. Chandika sold his rights to the property to the plaintiffs-appellants. Musammat Mahadei died in 1916 and after Mahadei's death the plaintiffs brought this suit against Hargobind Singh and others, the representatives of Chandra Bali, for possession of the property.

The learned Subordinate Judge without recording evidence has dismissed the suit, on the ground that the plaintiffs are bound by the decision in the suit brought by Chandra Bali against the parties and that the suit is barred by limitation.

In coming to his finding on the question of res judicata, the learned Subordinate Judge has relied on the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Pertabnarain Singh v. Trilokinath Singh (1) That was a case, however, in which the previous suit had been brought against a person who succeeded to the estate as a Hindu widow, and it was held by their Lordships that as the widow fully represented the estate in the former suit, a subsequent suit brought by a claimant whose interest vested in him only upon the death of the widow was barred. In the present case, however, if the Will of 1867 be a valid Will, Musammat Paraga had from the death of Fateh Singh a vested interest in the estate, though she could not claim possession of the estate until the death of Musammat Mahadei. Her cause of action for possession of the estate under the Will would not arise until Musammat Mahadei's death. In Pertabnarain Singh's case (1) the widow fully represented the estate and the previous suit was fully contested, whereas in the present case Musammat Mahadei did not fully represent the estate, nor did she contest the suit brought by Chandra Bali. All the rulings to which the learned Pleader for the respondents has referred me are cases in which the previous suit was brought against a person who held a Hindu widow's estate and no case on all fours with the present one has been cited. It seems to me that assuming the Will of 1867 to be a genuine and valid one, Musammat Paraga had from the date of Fateh Singh's death a vested interest in the estate, that in the suit brought by Chandra Bali in 1878 Musammat Mahadei did not fully represent the estate and that, therefore, the decision in that suit was not binding on Musammat Paraga and it is, therefore, not binding on the plaintiffs appellants who claim through Musammat Paraga.

Nor can I agree with the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the suit is barred by limitation. Musammat Mahadei's title was determined by the decree obtained against her by Chandra Bali in 1878 and, therefore, she was unable to convey any interest in the property to Chandika under the deed of gift of 5th July 1879. The only interest which Chandika obtained in the property under that deed of gift was the vested remainder of Musammat Paraga. Musammat Paraga could not have brought a suit for possession of the property until the death of Musammat Mahadei, and the cause of action for the present suit brought by the representatives of Musammat Paraga arose on Musammat Mahadei's death. In this view of the case it cannot be held that the suit is barred by limitation.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the suit will go back to the lower Court for re-admission under its original number and for trial of the other issues and decision on the merits. Costs of this appeal will follow the result.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

Muhammadan Law—Minor—Mother, whether natural guardian—Act of mother, when binding on minor child—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, paras. 20, 21—Arbitration, reference to—Time within which award must be made—Delay, effect of—Party, right of, to call upon arbitrators to make award or renounce appointment.

Although according to Muhammadan Law a mother is not a natural guardian, yet her action, when no natural guardian is in existence, which is obviously and manifestly to the advantage of her minor child, is binding on the minor. [p. 848, col. 2.]

The period of time within which arbitrators should issue their award depends upon the facts of each particular case, and it is always open to either party to call upon the arbitrators either to give their award or to renounce their appointment. [p. 848, col. 2.]

Where an unreasonable amount of delay occurs, and the issue of the award, after a long period of inactivity, synchronises with a dispute between one of the arbitrators and the attorney of one of the parties, the award must be regarded with great suspicion [p. 848, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an application under Order XX of the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure to have an award, made on a reference to arbitration without the intervention of the Court, filed in Court and a decree passed in accordance therewith. The following pedigree table will explain the relationship between the parties:—

MUHAMMAD KHAN.

Fazal Dad Khan,	Ramzan Khan, plaintiff No. 1.
Muhammad Afzal, married:— 1. Musammat Zainab, plaintiff No. 4; 2. Musammat Sardar Begum, defendant No. 1.	Musammat Wazir Begum, plaintiff No. 2.
Muhammad Iqbal, plaintiff No. 3.
Musammat Kamar-un-nisa, defendant No. 2.	Musammat Aisha, defendant No. 3.

Ramzan Khan and Muhammad Afzal were disputing concerning their joint property during the lifetime of Muhammad Afzal and on the death of the latter in order to put an end to those disputes, the parties signed a reference to arbitration on the 11th June 1905. Owing, however, to the resignation of one arbitrator that reference proved abortive and a fresh one was signed on the 28th July 1905, by which Mubarik Ali Shah and Chaudhri Barkat Khan were appointed arbitrators with Pir Sardar Shah as umpire. The District Judge dismissed the suit, on the grounds that the minor defendants, Musammat Kumar un-nisa and Musammat Aisha, were not properly represented in the reference to arbitration inasmuch as their mother, Musammat Sardar Begam, was not their legal guardian; secondly, that the reference was not acted upon; and thirdly, that the arbitrators were guilty of misconduct.

Although the reference to arbitration, as stated above, is dated the 28th July 1905, the award is dated the 1st March 1910, but from the statement of Mubarik Ali Shah it is doubtful whether the award, though purporting to have been written on the 1st of March 1910, was announced to the parties before the 17th March 1910. We have been through the proceedings of the arbitrators and find that by January 1906 the arbitrators had practically concluded their inquiry. After that date the parties resorted to litigation and the arbitrators did nothing more till December 1908, when in the absence of the respondents, who refused to attend the proceedings, they recorded two further statements and closed the proceedings. Even then they issued no award. In March 1909 they purchased a stamp paper, evidently at the instance of the appellant, but even then they failed to make their award and no further step was taken by them till apparently the 17th March 1910, when the award was issued, and it is a significant fact that the arbitrators were aroused to action just at the time when proceedings of a criminal nature were taking place between the plaintiffs' arbitrator, Mubarik Ali Shah, and Sardar Khan, the respondents' attorney, and it is a striking circumstance that the date on which the award was promulgated was the very date on which one Maula Bakhsh, with whom was associated Sardar Khan, brought a criminal complaint against Mubarik Ali Shah.

With regard to the District Judge's finding that the minor defendants were not properly represented in the reference to arbitration, one only of them, Musammat Kamar-un-nisa, has raised this objection through a guardian ad litem, Jahangir. Although her mother was not a natural guardian according to Muhammadan Law, it appears that at the time no such natural guardian was in existence and the action of the mother on behalf of her minor child, we should hold in such circumstances, bound the minor, for it is obviously and manifestly to the advantage of the minor that a claim in which she was interested should be decided by an honest arbitration rather than by resort to the Courts.

With regard to the finding that the reference was not acted upon, we have no doubt that for sometime, at any rate, the reference was acted upon. The parties were represented before the arbitrators and a certain amount of inquiry was made by the latter, but it seems that after January 1906 neither the arbitrators nor the respondents were anxious to proceed with the arbitration. What period of time should be allowed to arbitrators for issuing their award is a matter which must be decided with reference to the facts of each case, and it is always open to either party to call upon the arbitrators either to give their award or to renounce their appointment In this case it appears to us there has been an unreasonable amount of delay and that the arbitrators at one time were not anxious to complete their proceedings, and we must regard with great suspicion the circumstance that the issue of the award after a long period of inactivity on the part of the arbitrators synchronized with a dispute between Mubarik Ali Shah and Sardar Khan, the attorney of Musammat Sardar Begam. In such circumstances we cannot but hold that the interests of Musammat Sardar Begam were likely to be prejudiced by the quarrel between Mubarik Ali Shah and Sardar Khan, and taking all the circumstances into consideration we cannot regard Mubarik Ali Shah as a fair and disinterested arbitrator in the case.

For these reasons we do not think that it would be in consonance with either equity or the law to direct the filing of the award and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Arbitration—Award—Decree on award—Person not party to decree, whether can enforce it—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 17—Appeal, second—Amendment of pleadings, whether can be allowed.

Plaintiff was a party to an arbitration award but was not a party to the decree which followed upon the award. He now sued to enforce his rights under the decree:

Held, that the suit was not entertainable as the decree could only be enforced by those persons who were parties to it. [p. 850, col. 1.]

Where parties elect to go to trial on a particular cause of action, and the issues and the evidence, in consequence, are limited to those which are relevant to that cause of action, the Court, in second appeal, will not permit an amendment of the pleadings with a view to a remand for re-trial, as that would practically be starting a new trial on a cause of action deliberately abandoned. [p. 850, col. 1.]

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal in a suit by the respondent Brahma Dat to recover Rs. 4,004 on the basis of a compromise decree which was passed with some modifications on an arbitration award. The plaintiff was a party to the award but was not a party to the compromise or the decree. The plaint as originally framed failed to make it clear what exactly the basis of his claim was, but the matter was settled by a statement of his Pleader made on the date of issues in which he stated definitely that he confined his cause of action to the decree.

The appeal as argued is based on two points only:—

1. The right of the plaintiff to enforce the decree to which he was not a party, and

2. the effect of Debi Prasad defendant having attained majority during the pendency of the suit in which the decree was made without any application having been made to discharge his guardian ad litem.

The facts are not in dispute. The various members of the family on 24th July 1911 agreed to get a partition of the family property made by arbitrators. No suit was pending at the time. The arbitrators made an award on 1st April 1913. Subsequently two suits were filed, one by one of the present appellants Debi Prasad, who was then a minor, to have the award set aside and the other by Durga Prasad to have it enforced. An abortive attempt at a compromise was made in August 1916, the matter falling through because Debi Prasad's guardian refused to agree to it. On the 30th January 1917 a compromise in similar terms was accepted by all the parties except the plaintiff Brahma Dat. He was thereupon discharged from the suits and a compromise decree passed as between the remaining parties.

The Courts below skated very lightly over the difficulty caused by the fact that the plaintiff was no party to the decree which merely afforded judicial recognition to the award and could not deprive the plaintiff of his rights under the latter. The answer to this is twofold. In the first place, the plaintiff elected to base his claim solely on the decree and, therefore, any rights which he might have under the award apart from the decree do not come in question. Secondly, the defendants-appellants had in their written statement challenged the validity of the award on various grounds. Owing to the position taken up by the plaintiff they refrained from entering into evidence on these grounds. This is apparent from the proceedings of 8th January 1918, in which both parties agreed on the examination of a witness by commission that no question relative to the validity of the award should be asked of him. It also appears from the fact that no issue touching the validity of the award was framed in the trial Court.

Another plea urged by the plaintiff-respondent is that though he was not a party to the compromise and decree, he had agreed previously to a petition of compromise identical in its terms. On that occasion the defendants did not agree. It is stated on behalf of the latter that the reason why they did not agree was that the plaintiff wanted to retain everything that the award gave him, while accepting concessions from the opposite party and that when the plaintiff ceased to be a party the reason for their objections was removed. The reason why the defendants refused to sign does not appear on the record, but in any case no argument can be based on a transaction which admittedly came to nothing.

It is a rule of general, if not universal, application that the only persons who can enforce a decree are the parties to it. It may be possible to imagine exceptions to this rule, but if so the present case is certainly not one of them. The case of Rani Dil Afza Begam v. The Nanpara Estate (1) relied on by the Courts below is not in point, as may be seen from the description of the position of Mohammad Kazim on page 572* of the report. The point actually decided in the case, namely, that Mohammad Kazim not being a party to the suit could not apply for execution of the decree, is directly in favour of the appellants. On this issue alone the appeal must succeed and the suit fail.

It was suggested by the learned Counsel for the respondent that if the Court accepted the appellants' view on this issue, it should amend the pleadings and remand the case for re-trial by the Court of first instance on the question of the validity of the award. I am not prepared to do this. Where parties elect to go to trial on a particular cause of action and the issues and evidence have been in consequence limited to those which were relevant to that cause of action, it would not be right for this Court in second appeal to start what would practically be a new trial on a cause of action deliberately abandoned.

It is unnecessary to go into the second issue. For the reasons already given, I allow the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, O. VIII, r. 6—Res judicata—Defendant failing to claim set-off—Suit, subsequent, to recover amount due, whether maintainable.

Where the defendant to a suit for the recovery of a sum of money sets up a defence of non-liability until certain goods deposited by him with the plaintiff as security are returned to him, and his defence is accepted, he is not precluded from instituting a suit to recover the goods, or the price thereof. The fact that he omitted to claim a set-off in the regular suit brought against him would not bar his claim, as he was under no obligation to avail himself of the right to claim set-off conferred by Order VIII, rule 6, of the Civil Procedure Code.

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the Liquidation Judge, Lahore, dated the 20th May 1918.

Mr. S. K. Mukerji, Official Liquidator, for the Appellant.

Mr. Abdul Rashid, for the Respondent

JUDGMENT.—The respondent Fazl Ilahi, in answer to a suit brought against him by the Liquidator of the Amritsar National Banking Company, Limited, for the recovery of Rs. 2,060, set up the defence that he was not liable to pay the money until the Bank had returned to him 12 boxes of goods placed by him in deposit with the Bank by way of security, and valued the goods at Rs. 5,574. This defence was accepted by the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Allahabad, before whom the suit came up for final adjudication, and the claim of the Bank was rejected. It is to be observed that Fazl Ilahi did not claim a set off, and consequently no decree could be passed in his favour.

He has now asked the Liquidation Judge to adjudicate upon his claim for the recovery of the goods or of the price thereof; and the question for determination is whether his omission to claim set-off in the regular suit instituted against him at Allahabad operates as a bar to his present claim. Now, Explanation IV to section 11, Civil Procedure Code, lays down that any matter which might and ought to have been made the ground of defence or attack in a former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit. A reference to the provisions of Order VIII, rule 6, which deal with set-off, leaves no doubt that the defendant may claim a set-off, and in that case his written statement shall be treated as a plaint. But he was under no obligation to avail himself of the right to claim set-off conferred by that rule, and I cannot, therefore, hold that he is precluded by any law from claiming the amount due to him. The judgment in Sri Gopal v. Pirthi Singh (1) deals with a different set of facts and has no relevancy to the point before me. In that case, a mortgagee brought an action upon his mortgage-deed and impleaded a prior mortgagee as a defendant to the suit. The latter made no defence and did not claim to have his prior charge redeemed. In a subsequent suit brought by him to enforce the prior charge their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the suit was barred by Explanation II of section 13 of the old Civil Procedure Code. It seems to me clear that it was the duty of the prior mortgagee to put forward his mortgage as a defence to the action brought by the puisne mortgage and I do not see how the decision in that case can be cited to defeat the claim of the present respondent.

I accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-respondents for possession of a two-thirds share of the village of Pakauri, Pargana Kundri, in the Sitapur District and for recovery of mesne profits. The circumstances in which the suit was brought are as follows:—

The original proprietor of the village Pakauri was one Baldeo Bakhsh Singh who resided at Bambhnawan. He died sonless 25 or 26 years before the institution of the suit and was succeeded by his widow Musammat Gulab Kunwar, plaintiff No. 2. She has died since the filing of this appeal and it is a question, which will have to be decided, whether respondents Nos. 2 and 3 are entitled to be entered as her representatives. On the 10th September 1894 she executed a deed of mortgage, which is printed at page 30 of the appellants' paper book, for Rs. 3,000 in favour of Kalka Singh whose son Baryar Singh is respondent No. 4. Under this deed the entire village Pakauri was mortgaged. Kalka Singh obtained a decree for sale of the village in satisfaction of this mortgage. In the sale proclamation by mistake village Kundri was advertised and not Pakauri, but it was Pakauri which was actually put up for sale. The property was put up for sale in three lots and it was only found necessary to sell two-thirds of the property. Balmakund purchased one-third and Kurban Ali the other third

Since the filing of this appeal Balmakund has died and his legal representatives as appellants are Jugal Kishore and Babu Mahadeo Prasad. The property was sold on the 20th April 1915. Musammat Gulab Kunwar, judgment-debtor, objected to the sale on the ground of the wrong name of the village being advertised, but her objection was rejected as time barred by the Deputy Commissioner of Sitapur on the 11th August 1915, and the dismissal of her objection was upheld by the Commissioner on the 22nd October 1915. Between these two dates it is alleged by the respondents that Musammat Gulab Kunwar adopted the respondent Bishwa Nath Singh. The act of adoption is said to have been accompanied by a deed of adoption, which is printed as Exhibit 1 on page 81 of the respondents' paper book. Having failed to get the sale set aside by the Court executing it, Bishwa Nath Singh, the alleged adopted son of Musammat Gulab Kunwar, and Musammat Gulab Kunwar brought this suit on the 13th March 1916 for possession of the village on the following grounds:—

(a) that the village of Pakauri was never sold at the auction sale,

(b) that even if it were sold, the rights of the purchasers ceased to exist from the date of the adoption of Bishwa Nath Singh.

The alleged adoption was stated in paragraph 2 of the plaint to be in accordance with the verbal authority of Baldeo Bakhsh Singh husband of Gulab Kunwar and also in accordance with a family custom under which the widow had power to make an adoption without her husband's permission. The defendants denied the allegation that the sale was ineffectual by reason of the village Kundri and not the village Pakauri having been entered in the advertisement. They denied the adoption and they denied the widow's power to adopt. They also pleaded that, even if the adoption were proved, it could not affect the interest acquired by the purchasers before the adoption. On this last pleading no issue was framed and nothing has been said in argument in appeal. It must, therefore, be held to have been dropped. The Subordinate Judge of Sitapur found that the mistake in the advertisement did not vitiate the sale of the village Pakauri. The respondents have not attempted to appeal to uphold the Subordinate Judge's decree in their favour by contesting this decision, for reasons that will be mentioned later. The Subordinate Judge also found that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that oral permission to adopt was given to Musammat Gulab Kunwar by Baldeo Bakhsh Singh, a finding which is contested in appeal by the respondents but with little vigour. He found that if the adoption were held valid, the adopted son would be entitled to the possession of the property at once and would not have to wait for the death of the widow. The finding has ceased to be of any effect, as Musammat Gulab Kunwar has died and so we are not concerned with it. He found that there was a custom in the family of Baldeo Bakhsh Singh whereby widows might adopt without any authority given to them by their husbands. He also found that the adoption did in fact take place. The appellants have not in this appeal attempted to argue that, even if the widow had power to adopt, the adoption did not take place. We are not, therefore, concerned with this matter. The Subordinate Judge in conclusion gave a decree for possession to the respondents Bishwa Nath Singh and Musammat Gulab Kunwar, the widow.

It appears desirable to decide first the question as to who should have been brought on the record as respondents in the place of the deceased Musammat Gulab Kunwar. Now Bishwa Nath Singh, the other plaintiff, has no interest in the suit except as the adopted son of Baldeo Bakhsh Singh. If he is the adopted son, then Musammat Gulab Kunwar should not have been made a party to the suit. If he is not the adopted son, Musammat Gulab Kunwar's representatives could have resisted this appeal on the ground that the alleged sale of Pakauri was invalid and that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding it to be valid. In this case Bishwa Nath Singh could not possibly be her representative, nor has he any interest in the matter of her representatives. We cannot, therefore, listen to his Counsel when he affirms that the persons whom the appellants desired to be impleaded as representatives of Musammat Gulab Kunwar are not her representatives because they are related through females, whereas agnate relations are said to be in existence. The case, therefore, stands as follows. The appellants have named some persons as Musammat Gulab Kunwar's representatives and in spite of notice these persons have not objected to being impleaded as representatives. We accordingly allow their names to stand. It is the appellants' business if they have entered the wrong persons.

There are thus two points for decision in this appeal, namely, whether Musammat Gulab Kunwar had authority from her husband to adopt, and, secondly, whether failing such authority she had a right of custom to adopt without authority from her husband.

As to the first point little need be said. The deed of adoption, purporting to be by Musammat Gulab Kunwar, is given on page 81 of the respondents' paper book. It states that the adoption is "according to the Hindu Law and after performing all religious ceremonies with the consent of my husband. Thakur Baldeo Bakhsh Singh, Talnqdar of Bambhnawan, as expressed in his Will." Paragraph 2 of the plaint runs as follows:—"That on the 17th of October 1915, according to the oral Will made by Thakur Baldeo Bakhsh Singh deceased and the family custom under which a widow has power to make an adoption without her husband's permission, I formally adopted plaintiff No. 1 and have executed the deed of adoption." This vague statement as to oral authority was corrected in the pleadings. We find on page 3 of the appellants' paper book that on the 19th August 1916 the plaintiffs' Pleader stated as follows:—"Four or five days before his death Thakur Baldeo Bakhsh Singh made the oral Will referred to in the second paragraph of the plaint. The Will was that if he died without making an adoption plaintiff No. 2 should adopt a son, and in case the son so adopted by her died without leaving a male child she could make another adoption." What the Pleader must be deemed to have said was that the authority in words to adopt was given by Baldeo Bakhsh Singh four days before his death. The learned Subordinate Judge has stated that neither Musammat Gulab Kunwar nor any of her four witnesses produced to support the giving of this oral authority four or five days before the death of Baldeo Bakhsh Singh speak of any such Will on either such day. This does not appear to be quite correct in the case of Musammat Gulab Kunwar. She states that six days before his death her husband told her to make an adoption and that he told her again on the day of his death, and that he had mentioned it constantly during these six days. Her evidence does not support the Pleader's allegation that Baldeo Bakhsh Singh said she might adopt a second time if the boy first adopted were to die. On page 36 of the appellants' paper book there is an earlier deed of adoption, dated the 28th May 1902, by Musammat Gulab Kunwar. By this deed she adopted a boy named Narain who has died. The deed states that the adoption was according to the old custom and practice prevailing in the family, but does not state any word about permission having been given. We concur with the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiffs must be deemed to have failed to prove the giving of the oral authority specified by their Pleader.

We now come to the question of custom which has been argued at great length. The Subordinate Judge states that eight wajib ul-arzes have been produced by the plaintiffs-respondents in support of the alleged custom, and goes on to say that "it will appear from the evidence of certain witnesses of the plaintiffs that the aforesaid eight villages relate to the family of the Raghubansis to which Thakur Baldeo Bakhsh Singh belonged." The appellants object that the evidence of these witnesses is not sufficient to prove that all the eight wajib-ul-arzes belonged to the family of the Raghubansis inasmuch as these witnesses are not proved to have themselves belonged to that family. It is not denied by the appellants that the members of the family owned Bambhnawan and Supauli. There is also documentary evidence to prove that members of the family owned Kathora. On page 59 of the respondents' paper book is an extract from the copy of the wajib ul-arz of that village and among the proprietors are entered Ganga Bakhsh, Suraj Bali and Jagan Nath, sons of Balwant Singh. These three names appear on the pedigree A on page 44 of the appellants' paper book, a pedigree which is part of Exhibit

B22 admitted by the appellants. This pedigree B shows that these three persons are of the same family as Sheo Bakhsh Singh husband of Lachhmin Kunwar. The wajib-ul-arz in respect of the village of Supauli shows Musammat Lachhmin Kunwar, wife of Sheo Bakhsh Singh, as the owner. It is, therefore, clear that these three owners of Kathora are related to the owner of Supauli and as stated above, it is admitted that Supauli belongs to a branch of the family. As regards the other villages we find that the plaintiffs' witnesses depose to their belonging to Raghubansis. For instance, Harpal Singh Zemindar of Kundi says: "The Raghubansis of my family residing in this district are in", and then he mentions twelve villages. Again Arjun Singh of Kathora says: "People of my family reside in", and then he mentions seven villages. But these villages mentioned by these persons include some of the eight and exclude some of the eight. It is impossible to rely much on this sort of oral evidence. One would expect that a genealogical tree of the Raghubansi family would be produced to show that the owners of these villages were members of the family. Anrudh Singh, a son of Sheo Bakhsh Singh the owner of Supauli, states: "There is a written pedigree in my own house and it is also filed in Courts." Yet this pedigree was never produced in this Court. It has to be remembered that what he pleaded is a family custom and not a tribal custom. On page 55 of the District Gazetteer of Sitapur, United Provinces, edited by Mr. Nevill, the Raghubansis are mentioned as a tribe. It is not pretended that all the Raghubansis have a custom that widows might adopt without authority. When, therefore, the custom is set up on behalf of one family of the Raghubansis, it is very necessary to have evidence that the wajib-ul-arzes relied on are in respect of villages owned by members of the family and not merely by the members of the tribe. We are unable to hold that the wajib-ul-arzes of any of the eight villages except those of Bambhnawan, Supauli and Kathora have been proved to be relevant. Of these three wajib ul arzes that of Bambhnawan states that a widow can adopt with or without authority, that of Supauli states nothing about any authority and so it must be presumed that the ordinary provision of the Hindu Law in these provinces, where under the husband's authority is necessary, prevails there. That of Kathora mentions that the widow can adopt irrespective of any authority. Of the five wajib-ul-arzes which we have excluded, those of Mandila and Rasulpur say that the widow can adopt with or without authority, while those of Ismailpur, Deotapur and Kundi do not refer to the matter of authority. There is, therefore, variance in the three which we think relevant as well as in the five which we think irrelevant. We fail to understand how the wajib-ul arzes which make no reference to the husband's authority can assist the respondents. They must, in our opinion, be construed to mean that they give the ordinary power of adoption, that is, adoption with the authority of the husband. Whether then we accept the three wajib-ul-arzes as relevant of the whole eight, it is apparent that they are discrepant as to the power of the widow. This being so, no one in particular of them can be relied on as an accurate record of the custom of the family. The learned Subordinate Judge has stated, "to sum up, the custom recorded in the wajib-ul-arzes of all the aforesaid villages (here he mentions the eight) is unanimous and invariable so far as the unrestricted power of a Hindu widow to make the adoption is concerned, though there is some variation on other points relating to the general subject of adoption." This statement of fact can only be called correct if we interpret a power of the widow to adopt as meaning the same thing as a power to adopt with or without the authority of the husband. This it does not seem possible to do. Where the matter of authority is not mentioned, it must be presumed that the power to adopt was the ordinary power of a Hindu widow to adopt with authority. The respondents' Counsel argues that if the statement of the wajib-ul-arz that the widow had power to adopt merely meant that she had the ordinary power under Hindu Law, namely, to adopt with the husband's permission, then it would have been superfluous to enter the fact. The wajib ul arzes, however, do contain such superfluous statements. For instance the Supauli wajib ul-arz states that every co-sharer can adopt and that an after-born son shares with the adopted son, and states that a daughter and a daughter's son inherit in the absence of a son. The Ismailpur wajib-ul-orz states that if a natural son is born after adoption both share equally. Other instances might also be given. The learned Subordinate Judge has also stated that the divergence in these wajib ul-arzes on many other questions of family custom will not affect their validity as records of the peculiar custom of adoption set up. We are unable to agree with this finding. If the wajib-ul-arzes are not consistent, they cannot be relied on as correctly stating the custom of the family. The variation is indeed very great. In Bambhnawan and Supauli the jethansi right is said to exist. In Kathora it does not exist. In Bambhnawan a sonless widow inherits without power of transfer. In Supauli she has the power of transfer. Kathora mentions nothing about it. If we refer to the whole eight wajib-ul-arzes the variety is ever greater. It states that there is no restriction of caste or family in adoption. This is a very peculiar provision and the appellants' Counsel relies on it as indicating that the wajib-ul-arz was merely a record of what Baldeo Bakhsh Singh and Sheoratan Singh sons of Gopal Singh, the Zemindars, wished to be recorded. Their father Gopal Singh was adopted by Raghunath Singh. One of the appellants' witnesses Raghubar Singh, an under-proprietor in Bambhnawan says that Gopal Singh was the natural and not the adopted son of Raghunath Singh, Gopal Singh's mother was a Brahman woman who was the mistress of Raghunath Singh and she bore Gopal Singh to him. Now this is a witness for the defendants-appellants, but Gulab Kunwar plaintiff has herself stated as follows:—"I heard from my mother-in-law along with others that Gopal Singh was adopted, but I cannot say whether he was the son of a Brahman or Rajput. I do not know the name of the natural father of Gopal Singh." There appears, therefore, to be some justification for the suggestion that Baldeo Bakhsh Singh and Sheoratan Singh, when they stated that a son could be adopted from any caste, were influenced by the fact that their own father could only have had title to the estate validly if this were the case. In conclusion we are of the opinion that the wajib-ul arzes are not reliable evidences of the village custom set up.

As to the witnesses who depose to the custom, their evidence is vitiated in the main by their failure to prove in a satisfactory manner that they belong to the family on behalf of which the custom is set up. The names of these witnesses are given in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge The first Anrudh Singh was himself adopted into the family. He is not a person, within the meaning of section 48 of the Evidence Act, who would be particularly likely to know of the customs of the family. The witness Guman Singh says: "I am also Raghubansi and so was Baldeo Bakhsh Singh. I cannot say if he and I belong to one and the same family. To my knowledge I was never on shaving terms with Baldeo Bakhsh Singh on occasions of deaths." Hardeo Singh says: "I belong to the same family as Baldeo Bakhsh Singh," but in cross-examination he says: "I do not remember the pedigree showing my connection with Baldeo Bakhsh Singh." Arjun Singh says again: "I belong to one and the same family as Baldeo Bakhsh Singh," but in cross examination he says: "I cannot give the pedigree connecting me with Baldeo Singh." Gokaran Bakhsh says: "Among us Raghubansis of Kathora (and six other villages) there is no separate family. I mean that all these Raghubansis belong to one and the same family." Raghuraj Singh says: "The Raghubansis of my family reside in this district in the following villages (mentions them)." But in cross-examination he states, "I cannot tell the pedigree showing my relationship with the Raghubansis of those villages." Harpal Singh says, "the Raghubansis of my family reside in such and such villages." The remaining witnesses use exactly the same form of words.

The learned Subordinate Judge has also relied on four alleged instances of adoption in the family. The weakness of this evidence consists in the failure of the respondents to prove that these adoptions were made without the authority of the husband. They one and all say that they heard from other people that no authority was given. This evidence in our opinion is not admissible. Section 18 of the Evidence Act will not cover an opinion on a fact other than the existence of a custom. It may be almost impossible for the respondents to prove the negative, namely, that permission was not given, but this will not justify us in presuming that permission was not given or in accepting hearsay as evidence of the fact.

It must be admitted that this is a peculiar case. If the plaintiffs-respondents had come into Court not setting up a custom but alleging permission given orally on many occasions, it would have been very difficult to hold that such permission was not given. Unfortunately for the plaintiffs before this case arose, Musammat Gulab Kunwar in the first adoption of Narain had set up a custom in the family. If, therefore, she had in this case relied only on the authority of her husband, she would have had to reconcile such a case with her previous conduct in respect of the adoption of Narain. She, therefore, chose to plead in the alternative. The setting up of the custom has necessarily weakened the credibility of her case that permission was given. If there was a well established custom no permission was required. We hold that the wajib ul arzes and the oral evidence relied on by the respondents are insufficient to prove a custom so radically opposed to the ordinary Hindu Law prevailing in these provinces. In taking a different view to the Subordinate Judge we are not so much taking a different view as to the credibility of the witnesses as a different view to the effect of what those witnesses say. Those witnesses, with very few exceptions, have failed to state definitely (much less prove) that they belong to the same family as Baldeo Bakhsh Singh. If a tribal custom had been set up, their evidence might have been of some value. But no tribal custom has been set up and if it had been set up, it is probable that it could have been easily disproved by the production of other wajib-ul-arzes of villages belonging to the members of the tribe. We cannot but consider extremely significant the fact that no genealogical tree of the family of the plaintiffs is produced. Anrudh Singh, an adopted son of the family, says that "Sathan Rai was the original ancestor of the family of the Raghubansis. From the perusal of the family pedigree I came to know of the said ancestor." In cross examination he states: "There is a written pedigree in my own house and it is also filed in Courts." Yet no attempt has been made to produce this pedigree or to show that the witnesses produced by the plaintiffs have any authority as members of that family to depose to the custom of that family. Some reliance appears to have been placed on a passage in the District Gazetteer of the Sitapur District, edited by Mr. Nevill, on page 87. The passage runs as follows:—

"Two large properties are still held by the Raghubansis, the ancient owners of the eastern portion of the district before the rise of the Raikwars. Both claim descent from Sathan Rai, a resident of Ajodhiya, who in 1072 A. D. settled in the Mallanpur neighbourhood. In the third generation the estates were divided, one brother taking Bambhnawan in Kundri, and the other Sikri Sipauli in Tambaur. The former was held before annexation by Anup Singh, and settlement was made with his son, Raghunath Singh, who died leaving his property to his widow. She adopted one Gopal Singh, from whom the estate descended to the present owner, Thakur Sheoratan Singh, who holds five Mahals and one Patti in Kundri North and one Mahal and two Pattis in Biswan, paying a revenue of Rs. 5,051. Sikri Sipauli descended to Umed Singh, and then to his son, Sheo Bakhsh Singh, with whom the Summary Settlement was made. His estate passed in 1863 to his widow, Lachhmin Kunwar, who adopted Anrudh Singh, the present owner, and died in 1898. This property comprises nine Mahals in Tambaur and five in Kundri North, together assessed at Rs. 9,265."

In our opinion this passage will not supply the want of a pedigree showing the family in respect of which the custom is claimed and the members of it.

For the above reasons we allow this appeal with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 144—Adverse possession—Trespasser, possession of, whether adverse to collaterals.

R., prior to 1865, adopted M., who predeceased him leaving an adopted son J. On R.'s death J. succeeded to the estate and a suit by certain collaterals of R. against him for possession was dismissed. On J.'s death his two sons succeeded. The plaintiff, another collateral of R.'s, brought the present suit for possession of R.'s land, but his suit was dismissed as barred by limitation. On appeal:

Held, that even if J. was not the rightful heir of R. and his possession was that of a trespasser, it was, nevertheless, adverse to all the collaterals among whom was the plaintiff's father, and as plaintiff derived his title through his father, J.'s possession was adverse to him and his suit was barred by limitation.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Amritsar at Gurdaspur, dated the 14th December 1914.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din Kureshi, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Fazl-i-Husain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff in this case is a collateral of one Ratna, who before 1865 adopted his sister's son Mehar Singh. Mehar Singh, however, predeceased Ratna and on Ratna's death, which occurred more than forty years ago, Mehar Singh's son Jhanda Singh succeeded to the estate. Jhanda Singh died about a year before the present suit and was succeeded by his two sons. In this suit plaintiff claims possession of Ratna's land, but the suit has been dismissed on the ground that it is barred by limitation.

In 1870 two of Ratna's collaterals, who were not, however, ancestors of the plaintiff, sued Jhanda Singh for possession of the land, but the suit was dismissed, the Courts deciding that Jhanda Singh by reason of his and his father's services to Ratna was entitled to possession of the land, and the Court quite unnecessarily made a suggestion that the collaterals could sue on the death of Jhanda Singh. This suggestion was quite uncalled for and was based probably on the circumstance that at that time Jhanda Singh had no male issue.

The learned Additional Divisional Judge holds that the suit is time barred under Article 144 of the Limitation Act, and before us it is urged that the decision of the Court below is in conflict with the principles of Sundar v. Salig Ram (1), and that the Court below has wrongly distinguished that case from the present. Reference has been made by learned Counsel to certain judgments of this Court in which it was held that though a person governed by customary law derived his right to possession through his father, he did not so derive his right to sue for that possession through him. On the other hand, there are judgments of this Court that the result of litigation bona fide sustained by such a person's father or ancestor is binding upon that person. Now this Court in the litigation of 1870 held that Mehar Singh had been rightly adopted by Ratna, and there can be no doubt as to the bona fides of that litigation. If then the decree obtained by one of the collaterals enures for the benefit of other collaterals, it is hard to see why a decree obtained against a collateral should not affect all other collaterals similarly interested. However that may be, Jhanda Singh has been in possession since the death of Ratna which took place over forty years ago. If Mehar Singh was adopted by Ratna, his descendants are entitled to possession. If he was not adopted by Ratna, Jhanda Singh since the death of Ratna has been in possession as a trespasser. His possession was adverse to all the collaterals, included among whom was the plaintiff's father, and we hold that as plaintiff derived his title through his father, Jhanda Singh's possession has been adverse to him, and the suit was rightly dismissed as barred by limitation.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 120—Trees, removal of, suit for—Limitation.

The period of limitation prescribed for a suit by a landlord for the removal of trees newly planted by a person who had no right to plant them, is contained in Article 120 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, and the suit must be confined to those trees which were planted within the six years immediately preceding the institution of the suit.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated 25th March 1918, modifying that of the Munsif, Musafirkhana (Sultanpur), dated the 14th September 1917.

Syed Ali Mohammad, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. N. Roy holding brief of Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to certain trees standing on plot No. 363, new Khasra. The allegation of the plaintiff was that he was in proprietary possession of the said land and that the defendant took wrongful possession thereof and planted trees on the same in August 1914. The defendant admitted that the land on which the trees stood belonged to the plaintiff. He merely claimed a title to the trees, alleging that the trees formed a grove which was his ancestral property and that except a few trees all of them existed from more than six years.

The Court of first instance dismissed the claim, holding that the trees in question had been in the adverse possession of the defendant from more than 12 years prior to the suit and that the plaintiff had no right to claim the removal of the 6 trees which had been planted within six years prior to the suit. The lower Appellate Court, however, modified that decree and directed the removal of certain trees which, it held, had been planted within the last 12 years.

Article 120 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) allows a period of six years for a relief for which no specific limitation is provided elsewhere. A suit by the landlord for the removal of trees, newly planted by a person who had no right to plant the same, is, as pointed out in Musharf Ali v. Iftkhar Husain (1), governed by the above article. If any trees were planted more than six years prior to the suit, the right of the plaintiff to have those trees removed cannot now be enforced. The question is, therefore, confined to the trees which, according to the report of the Commissioner accepted by the lower Appellate Court, were planted within the last six years. It does not appear how the Court of first instance came to the conclusion that only six trees were less than six years old. The report of the Commissioner appointed by the lower Appellate Court shows that no less than 28 trees, bearing Nos. 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 22, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38 and 39 in his map, are less than six years old. It is not established that the defendant had any right to plant those trees. He does not possess the rights of a grove-holder because his title is based on adverse possession of the trees planted by him. He cannot, however, be allowed to extend his adverse possession by planting new trees.

The appeal is allowed in so far that the decree passed by the lower Appellate Court will be confined to the removal of the 28 trees above mentioned. The parties will, in the circumstances, bear their own costs of this appeal.

Appeal partly allowed.

Arbitration, reference to—Party not joining in written application but accepting arbitration orally and taking active part in proceedings, position of—Objection that application was not signed, maintainability of—Estoppel—Revision—Interlocutory order—High Court, power of interference of.

Where one of the parties to a suit did not join in a written application for the case to be referred to arbitration but made an oral application accepting the arbitration, and took an active part in the proceedings:

Held, that he was estopped from objecting to the legality of the proceedings on the ground that he did not sign the application for reference to arbitration.

Ordinarily, an interlocutory order is not liable to be interfered with in revision: Where, however, great or irremediable injury might result, the High Court will interfere with such an order.

Revision from the order of the Munsif, 1st Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 25th June 1918.

Mr. Fakir Chand, for the Petitioners.

Shaikh Umar Bakhsh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case there are two plaintiffs and one defendant. A written application was made to the Court by one plaintiff and the defendant for the case to be referred to arbitration. On the following day the other plaintiff Ganga Ram, who had not joined in the written application, made an oral application before the Court to the effect that he accepted the arbitrator. The arbitration proceedings lasted for over a year and on behalf of the plaintiffs Ganga Ram conducted the proceedings throughout. An award was duly filed, but objected to by Ganga Ram on the ground that he had not signed the original application to the Court for an order of reference. The Court has held that this omission vitiated the whole of the proceedings and has set aside the award. Against this order the defendant has put in an application for revision.

Even if it be admitted that the whole proceedings of the arbitrator were without jurisdiction on the ground that a mandatory provision of the law had not been complied with, I do not think that the lower Court should have set aside the award. The objecting plaintiff was clearly estopped, by his own actions in agreeing verbally in the Court to the arbitration and in taking an active part in the proceedings, from raising any objection as to the legality of these proceedings on account of the want of his application in writing, and the lower Court clearly committed a material irregularity in not giving effect to a provision of law contained in the Evidence Act.

It is objected that against an interlocutory order of this description no application for revision can lie, and I agree with this proposition in ordinary cases. There is no doubt, however, that this Court has a power of interference in the case of an interlocutory order, though such power is only exercised in cases where great or irremediable injury might result. In the present case the waste of time, money and trouble involved by the re-opening of the whole proceedings could never be repaired. Moreover, there are other objections to the award which have not been decided by the Munsif and if it became necessary on some future occasion, after an appeal, to decide these objections, their correct decision might be rendered difficult owing to the lapse of time. I, therefore, consider that this is a fit case for the interference of this Court and accepting the application for revision I remand the case to the lower Court for decision of the remaining objections to the award.

TOKHARAM MARWARI AND ANOTHER —PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Burden of proof—Evidence an both sides—Court, duty of.

The question of onus of proof only arises when there is a question of fact to be determined and there is no evidence one way or the other which will enable the Judge to come to a conclusion. In such a case, the Court has to decide whether the burden of proving that fact lies upon the plaintiff or the defendant. If the burden of proof lies upon the plaintiff, and the proof of that fact is essential to his case, then the plaintiff must fail because he has not discharged the burden which lay upon him. On the other hand, if the onus of proving that fact was upon the defendant, and its proof is essential to the defendant's success in the case, then the defendant must fail because he failed to discharge the burden which was upon him. [p. 861, col 2.]

But, where there is a fact which is essential to the determination of the case, whether the burden, in the first instance, be upon the plaintiff or upon the defendant, if there is evidence adduced by both parties, then the question of the burden of proof becomes immaterial and the Court has to determine that question upon the evidence before it. [p. 861, col. 2.]

Mr. Rajendra Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. K. Bhattacharji and B. C. De, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal by the defendants from a decision of the District Judge of Dumka, dated the 3rd May 1918, reversing a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Raj Mahal, dated the 25th January 1918.

The plaintiffs brought a suit to enforce a mortgage executed by the principal defendants on the 23rd July 1910 as security for an advance of Rs. 700. At the date of the suit a sum of Rs. 1,400 was due as principal and interest and that was the amount claimed. The defence was that no consideration had passed for the execution of the bond and that it was merely a benami transaction, and the question which had to be decided at the trial was mainly whether consideration had in fact passed. It is not disputed that the plaintiffs in such a case have to make out the execution of the bond and the fact that consideration was paid, unless it is admitted. In most cases there is a recital in the bond that the consideration money has been paid and when execution is proved, this admission by the mortgagor is sufficient to satisfy the burden of proof as to the passing of consideration and if the mortgagor denies the passing of consideration, then it is for him to make out such a case. In the present case the bond admitted the payment of consideration by the mortgagee and it was further proved that at the registration proceedings, which took place shortly after the execution of the bond, payment of the consideration was again admitted by the mortgagor. Had the plaintiffs upon this question rested their case there, undoubtedly they would have discharged the burden of proof and it would have been for the defendants to satisfy the Court that notwithstanding this admission no consideration had, in fact, passed. The plaintiffs, however, in the course of the evidence produced by them in support of their case, admitted that the consideration money had not, in fact, been paid up to the time when the registration took place and, therefore, in so far as there was a recital in the bond and in so far as the registration proceedings in themselves afforded evidence of payment of the consideration money, it was quite clear that they could no longer be relied upon in view of the admission that those statements were not accurate. The plaintiffs, however, endeavoured to prove that although the consideration had not been paid up to the time of registration it was, in fact, paid some days later, and they gave evidence in support of that case. The defendants, on the other hand, called evidence to show that no consideration of any sort was paid at any time and, therefore, the only question which the trial Court had to decide was which of these two sets of witnesses it should believe. The learned Subordinate Judge after considering and weighing the evidence came to the conclusion that the defendants' case was the right one and that no consideration had, in fact, passed and he dismissed the suit.

The plaintiffs thereupon appealed to the District Judge and the District Judge, as it appears to me, fell into a serious error in regarding the case as one in which the onus of proving that no consideration passed lay upon the defendants. He deals with the case in this way. He says that one of the main points in the appeal was that the onus of proving that the consideration money was paid had been put wrongly upon the appellants before him (that is to say, the plaintiffs), whereas it should have lain heavily on the respondents to show that it was not paid. Then he says: "As to the onus I consider that it lies very heavily on the defendants to show that the consideration money was not paid. It was expressly admitted at the time of registration that it had been paid, and I do not think the onus is shifted because it is admitted by the plaintiffs that it was paid afterwards." Now there the learned Judge, in my opinion, clearly went wrong. Once it is admitted that the evidence of the registration proceedings as to payment of consideration is wrong and cannot be supported, it is quite clear that no value can be attached to evidence of that sort. Then the learned Judge says a little lower down: "As the lower Court's judgment shows, the decision of this point" (which we have just been considering as to whether the consideration had passed or not) "was difficult, because there was only a slight balance of evidence in favour of the defendants. I do not consider this balance is sufficient to discharge the onus placed upon them." It is quite clear reading that passage that the learned Judge was under the impression that notwithstanding that there was an admission by the plaintiffs that the evidence of the registration proceedings was not accurate, still there was by the mere fact of registration having taken place some sort of presumption that consideration had passed. It is, to my mind, clear that no such presumption can arise when there is a distinct admission that no consideration had passed at that time. Then again in a later passage of his judgment the Judge proceeds in this way: "The main fact in the case, which there is no getting away from, is that at the final registration of the document the defendants admitted receipt of the consideration money, and to allow them to deny this now without the clearest possible proof would be to render inoperative the provisions of the Registration Act for certifying the execution of contracts." There again the learned Judge seems to have forgotten that the evidence of payment of consideration, which is admittedly inaccurate according to the plaintiffs' own case, cannot be relied upon as any evidence at all. Nevertheless in spite of this the learned Judge based his whole decision upon evidence of this nature. The truth is that this case is not a case which had to be decided upon any question of onus of proof at all. The question of onus of proof only arises when there is a question of fact to be determined and there is no evidence one way or the other which will enable the Judge to come to a conclusion. In such a case the Court has to decide whether the burden of proving that fact lies upon the plaintiff or the defendant. If the burden of proof lies upon the plaintiff and the proof of that fact is essential to his case, then the plaintiff must fail because he has not discharged the burden which lay upon him. On the other hand if the onus of proving that fact was upon the defendant and its proof is essential to the defendant's success in the case, then the defendant must fail because he failed to discharge the burden which was upon him. But where there is a fact which is essential to the determination of the case, whether the burden, in the first instance, be upon the plaintiff or the defendant, if there is evidence of both parties, then the question of the burden of proof becomes immaterial and the Court has to determine that question upon the evidence before it. In the present case there was evidence both ways and the learned Judge should have applied his mind to the question which side ought to be believed, that is whether the evidence given by the plaintiffs as to the passing of consideration was more worthy of credit than the evidence given by the defendants to the contrary. Instead of that he dealt with the case as if there was some heavy burden upon the defendants in the first instance the moment that the registration proceedings had been proved. Although he seems to have realised that the lower Court thought the balance of evidence was in favour of the defendants, he says that having regard to this burden which lay upon the defendants that balance was not sufficient to discharge it. There, in my opinion, he was clearly wrong.

The only question is whether we should reverse this decision and restore the findings of the Subordinate Judge. I think the proper course is to remand the case for re-hearing by the learned District Judge with the directions already given, that is to say, he must disregard the question of onus altogether and deal with this question whether consideration passed or not merely upon the evidence actually before him, disregarding the admission made on registration which on the plaintiffs' own showing cannot be accepted as evidence of payment of the consideration money at or before registration. He must decide whether there was a subsequent passing of consideration. There was evidence both ways and he will have to consider that evidence for himself and judge whether the weight of evidence is, as the Subordinate Judge decided, in favour of the defendants or whether after considering it himself he is satisfied, notwithstanding the findings of the Subordinate Judge, that the weight of evidence is in favour of the plaintiffs and whether he is, therefore, entitled, in that state of things, to reverse the judgment of the trial Court.

In the result the decree appealed from will be set aside and the case will be remanded to be dealt with by the District Judge in accordance with law and the directions given above. The costs of this appeal will abide the result of the District Judge's decision.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 10th April 1917.

Mr. Brij Lal, Bakhshi Tek Chand and Lala Moti Lal, for the Appellants.

Messrs. C. Bevan Petman and Daulat Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of which the present appeal arises are fully stated in the judgments of the lower Courts and need not be repeated here. The only point upon which the plaintiffs' second appeal to this Court was admitted was whether the mortgagees in possession were entitled to compensation for improvements made by them on the mortgaged property without the consent of the mortgagor. The lower Courts have held that the defendants are entitled to Rs. 190 on account of annual repairs and Rs. 324 on account of additions to the mortgaged property. The lower Appellate Court in discussing the point says:—

"It has to be remembered in connection with the additions that Pandit Janardhan was not merely mortgagee, but part owner, and entitled to add."

These remarks appear to have been made under a misunderstanding of the facts. The original mortgage was made on the 3rd November 1883 and an additional mortgage was made on the 15th April 1884. The mortgagee rights were transferred to Musammat Jawandi, wife of Pandit Janardhan, on the 3rd of June 1892. Sarb Sukh, the father of Janardhan and the grandfather of the plaintiffs, died in 1892. It is found that the additions to the property were made in the years 1885-87 at which time Pandit Janardhan was not a part owner. The additions were, therefore, made by him and his wife in the capacity of mortgagee and not that of part owner.

Bakhshi Tek Chand on behalf of the plaintiffs relies upon Sher Singh v. Nihalu (1), Rupan Singh v. Champa Lal (2) and section 72 of the Transfer of Property Act. In Sher Singh v. Nihalu (1) it was held that upon the facts proved the mortgagees were not entitled to claim compensation for the alleged improvements which, though they might bring in a profit, had unnecessarily diverted the land from its original uses, without the consent of the mortgagor and for the benefit of the mortgagees while in possession. In that case the improvement made was that a plantain garden had been planted on agricultural land and the mortgaged property had, therefore, been diverted from its original use and undergone a complete change. It was accordingly held that the expenditure, whether it brought a profit or not, could not be said to have been a reasonable one. In my opinion that case is clearly distinguishable from the present one. In Rupan Singh v. Champa Lal (2) it was held that the mortgagees' claim could not be allowed except in so far as it fell within the terms of section 72 of the Transfer of Property Act. The decision in that case was based entirely upon the section in question, and the Transfer of Property Act is not in force in the Punjab and I am, therefore, not bound to follow it.

Mr. Petman on behalf of the respondents relies upon Prab Dial Shah v. Bhai Sawaya Singh (3) and the English case of Shepard v. Jones (4), in which it was held that if a mortgagee in possession has reasonably expended money in permanent works on the property, he is entitled, on prima facie evidence to that effect, to an inquiry whether the outlay has increased the value of the property, and if it has done so, he is entitled to be repaid his expenditure so far as it has increased such value. And in such case it is immaterial whether the mortgagor had notice of the expenditure. Notice to the mortgagor is only material when the expenditure is unreasonable, for the purpose of showing that he acquiesced in it. This case was discussed and the decision therein was followed in Prab Dial Shah v. Bhai Sawaya Singh (3), wherein it was held that upon a consideration of all the circumstances the defendants were entitled to the whole of the money spent by them upon permanent improvements to the mortgaged property, the value of which had increased at least to the extent of the sum expended. At page 303* of the Report the following passage occurs:—

"This is a case in which it would be clearly inequitable upon general principles of justice to allow the plaintiff the benefit of the defendants' outlay, without making him recoup the defendants for at least their actual expenditure, especially as this does not appear to be a case in which there is any danger, if no more than the actual sum spent is allowed, of the plaintiff being 'improved out of his estate.'"

Now in applying the above remarks to the facts of the present case, it is necessary to see what are the additions which were made to the mortgaged property. Rs. 114-5-0 was spent on completion and setting right certain portions of the house; Rs. 205-9-0 was spent upon a dalan which was added over the first floor; and Rs. 67-1-6 was spent on roofing a tawela. Now the first and third items appear to have been necessary expenditure; and it is argued by Mr. Petman that the second was certainly not unreasonable and that it has improved the value of the property. The house is situate in the city of Lahore, and it is urged that a room on the roof in which people can sleep in the hot weather is almost a necessity and certainly very greatly enhances the value of the property. I agree with Counsel that none of the additions can be said to be unreasonable within the meaning of the authorities relied upon by him. It is also admitted that the plaintiffs are persons of means, who can easily afford to pay their share of the cost of the improvements. It is not alleged, and it is quite clear, that the cost of the improvements has not made it difficult for them to redeem the property. I am, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiffs Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Revision—Error of law, whether ground for interference—High Court, power of interference of.

A High Court cannot interfere in revision on grounds of alleged error in law or fact, in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved. The fact that a Court has taken, in the exercise of its jurisdiction, a mistaken view as to what does or does not constitute misconduct in an arbitrator, is not a ground upon which the High Court will interfere under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 864, col. 2.]

Application for revision against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Naushahro.

Mr. Gopaldas Jhamatmal, for the Applicants.

Mr. Hirdaram Mewaram, for the Opponents.

JUDGMENT.—The applicants are defendants in a suit brought against them by opponents. It was referred to arbitration and an award was made in favour of plaintiffs. This award was, however, remitted for reconsideration as being beyond the arbitrators' authority. Therefore, the arbitrators submitted a fresh award, dismissing the plaintiffs' suit with costs. The Sub-Judge, after hearing the parties regarding objections taken to this award by the plaintiffs, has set it aside on the ground of misconduct of the arbitrators and ordered the suit to proceed in Court. Applicants ask this Court to revise the Sub-Judge's order in revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. Gopaldas for applicants contends that the Sub-Judge is clearly wrong in holding that there has been any misconduct on the part of the arbitrators and that the decision is so palpably erroneous in law that the case is one falling under clause (a) of section 115. He points out that paragraph 15 of Schedule II of the Code provides that "No award shall be set aside except" on certain grounds, which include "misconduct of the arbitrator," and he argues that when a Court holds certain conduct to be misconduct which is clearly not misconduct, it assumes and exercises a jurisdiction which is not vested in it by law. The Sub-Judge, however, had jurisdiction to determine whether or not the conduct of the arbitrators amounted to "misconduct" or not; and the mere fact that he took an erroneous view of what amounted to misconduct does not deprive him of the jurisdiction vested in him by paragraph 15. His jurisdiction is not affected, for, as stated by the Privy Council in Malkarjun v. Narhari (1), a Court has jurisdiction to decide wrong as well as right. We see no good reason, therefore, to differ from the view taken by the Calcutta High Court in Kali Charan Sirdar v. Sarat Chunder Choudhry (2) that the High Court cannot interfere in revision merely because a Court has taken in the exercise of its jurisdiction a mistaken view as to what does or does not constitute misconduct. The error may be a gross or palpable one, but this will not bring the case out of the Privy Council decisions that a High Court cannot interfere on grounds of alleged error in law or fact, in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved, see Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (3), Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (4) and Shew Prosad Bungshidhur v. Ram

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 34—Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 141—Rent, suit for, against under-proprietor—Interest, future, whether can be awarded.

The liability to pay future interest under section 34 of the Civil Procedure Code, if the Court decides to adjudge it, is not controlled by section 141 of the Oudh Rent Act, and it is within the competence of the trial Court, in a suit for arrears of rent, against an under-proprietor to award future interest at such rate as it may consider reasonable. [p. 865, col. 2]

Appeals from the decrees of the District Judge, Rai Bareli, dated the 24th February 1916, upholding those of the Assistant Collector, First Class, Rai Bareli, dated the 27th July 1915.

The Hon'ble Syed Wazir Hasan and Syed Ali Mohammad, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals arise out of suits brought by the superior proprietor against under-proprietors for arrears of rent. The Courts below disallowed the claim for interest for the period antecedent to the suits and also refused to award future interest.

It is now stated that in four of these cases, the decree-holder has been able to realize the decretal moneys and in one it still remains unrealized. The plaintiff-appellant in these appeals asserts his right to claim future interest and relies on section 34 of the Code of Civil Procedure read with section 135 of the Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), which renders that section applicable to such suits.

Section 141 of the Oudh Rent Act allows interest to be claimed on arrears of rent at the rate of one per cent. per mensem, but that provision does not apply to future interest, for under section 34 of the Code of Civil Procedure the Court can award such interest on the decretal money as it may consider reasonable from the date of the suit to the date of payment. In Thakur Ganesh Bakhsh v. Thakur Harihar Bakhsh (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that a person who held under-proprietary rights under a compromise was not liable to pay interest on the arrears of rent. Their Lordships, however, observed that though an under-proprietor was not a tenant within the meaning of section 141 of the Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), liable to pay interest on the arrears of rent, there was nothing in that Act which excluded any liability for payment of interest, which the under-proprietor might be under apart from the Act. The liability to pay future interest under section 34 of the Code of Civil Procedure, if the Court decides to adjudge it, is not controlled by section 141 of the Oudh Rent Act; and it was within the competence of the Court below to have awarded future interest at such rate as it may have considered reasonable.

It does not, however, appear desirable in these appeals that such an order should now be passed, because four of the decrees have already been satisfied and in the fifth sale proceedings are stated to be pending.

If there has been any delay in the realization, the decree-holder himself must be deemed to be responsible for it.

The appeals are, therefore, dismissed and as such respondents as have been served are not present and others have not been served, no order as to costs is necessary.

Appeal dismissed.

Second appeal from a decision of the Officiating District Judge, Muzaffarpur, dated the 24th September 1917.

Mr. Muhammad Hasan Jan, for the Appellants.

Messrs. K. Sahai, G. D. Singh and Ragho Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal by the defendants from the decision of the Officiating District Judge of Muzaffarpur, dated the 24th September 1917, reversing a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, dated the 24th February 1917.

The suit was instituted by the plaintiff on the 10th June 1915 claiming a declaration of title to a 4-annas 13-gandas 1-cowrie 1-krant share of Mauza Chak Kazi Nizam bearing Touzi No. 10005 recorded in the name of the defendants as proprietors, and confirmation of his possession. He further claimed a declaration that he was entitled to get his name registered in the mutation department in respect of the disputed share and the removal of the names of the defendants and an injunction restraining them from proceeding with a partition suit before the Collector in respect to the share in dispute. The plaintiff is admittedly the proprietor of the remaining 11 annas odd comprising 16 annas of the Touzi number in question. The entire property was originally an 8-annas pucca share of the said village and belonged to one Sheikh Kutubuddin, the ancestor of both the plaintiff and the defendants. Kutubuddin left three sons and one daughter, who upon his death succeeded to his 8-annas share of the property, each of the sons taking 2 annas 6 gandas 2 cowries 2 krants and the daughter 1 anna. One of the sons, Kasim Ali, is the grandfather of the present plaintiff. Another of the sons, Zahur Hussain, is the grandfather of the defendant No. 1. The third son Athar Ali transferred his share to his widow Bibi Rahiman by a benamkasa deed in the year 1842. The plaintiff's case is that Bibi Rahiman acquired in addition to the share of her husband the 1-anna share of Bibi Bahorun, the daughter of Kutubuddin as well as the 2-annas 6-gandas odd share of Zahur Hussain by transfer from his son Bande Ali, the father of the defendant No. 1, that Kasim Ali's share passed to Muhammad Haji and Muhammad Makbul, his two sons, the father and uncle of the plaintiff, and the latter having died his share as well as that of Muhammad Haji devolved upon him, the plaintiff, that Bibi Rahiman transferred the whole share which she had acquired from her husband, her sister-in-law Bibi Bahorun and Bande Ali, amounting to 5 annas 13 gandas odd, to Muhammad Haji and Muhammad Makbul, the father and uncle of the plaintiff, in the year 1855. The uncle died childless and consequently in due course the whole 8-annas share originally held by Sheikh Kutubuddin thus came into the possession of the plaintiff on the death of his father Muhammad Haji. This 8-annas share, which was part of Touzi No. 1162 of the village in question was in the year 1863 formed into a separate patti bearing Touzi No. 10005. This partition was made at the instance of the plaintiff's father Muhammad Haji, and the plaintiff's case is that his father and uncle remained in undisturbed possession of the whole property down to the year 1876. In that year the entire patti was brought to sale in execution of a decree obtained by one Mathura Das against the plaintiff's father and uncle and was purchased by one Nandan Lal. Before the sale objections were taken to the attachment of the property in the name of Bande Ali, claiming as proprietor of the 2-annas 6-gandas odd share which he had inherited from his father, and by two sisters of the plaintiff's father under section 278 of the old Code of Civil Procedure. These objections were disallowed and two regular suits were instituted on behalf of the respective objectors setting up a claim to portions of the property. Notwithstanding these suits, however, the sale proceedings were continued and the property was sold and purchased by Nandan Lal. The decree-holder Mathura Das was originally the principal defendant in these suits, but after the sale the auction-purchaser Nandan Lal was made the principal defendant. The judgment-debtors, the plaintiff's father and uncle, were also defendants in the suit. The suit brought in the name of Bande Ali was subsequently settled by the auction-purchaser confessing judgment in favour of the plaintiff Bande Ali and it was ordered that according to the confession of judgment by Nandan Lal, a decree for declaration of title in favour of Bande Ali should be passed. The plaintiff's case with regard to this suit and the circumstances attending it is that it was in the first instance an attempt instigated by his father and uncle to endeavour to save their property from attachment by setting up Bande Ali as a claimant to the 2 annas 6 gandas odd share which still remained recorded in his name, that the auction-purchaser Nandan Lal was under an obligation to the plaintiff's father who was a hakim and in the habit of attending Nandan Lal in that capacity, and that in order to discharge his obligation he consented to transfer the purchased property back to the plaintiff's father but that instead of executing a kobala in favour of the plaintiff's father for that purpose, he confessed judgment in the suits brought both by Bande Ali and the two sisters of the plaintiff's father in respect of the shares claimed by them and with regard to the remaining shares he executed a kobala in favour of one Akbar Ali, a friend of his, as benamidar for the plaintiff's father. The object of this was according to the plaintiff's case, that Muhammad Haji the plaintiff's father was desirous of keeping this particular property out of the hands of his creditors. The evidence shows, however, that there was in fact no fraud perpetrated on any of the creditors of Muhammad Haji as they were all paid off, and subsequently Akbar Ali transferred his share by a ladavi deed to the plaintiff in 1897 and about the same time the shares of the two aunts of the plaintiff were also recorded in the name of the plaintiff's wife. The share of Bande Ali, however, remained recorded in his own name, although it is the plaintiff's case that both he and his father before him were in sole possession and control of the property and that Bande Ali was merely their benamidar, and it was not until the year 1914 when ill-feeling arose between the plaintiff and the defendants that the latter endeavoured to get possession of the share recorded in their name by filing a petition for partition before the Collector. Hence the present suit claiming a declaration of the plaintiff's title.

Before the Subordinate Judge the main issues were, first, whether the 5-annas 13-gandas odd share transferred by Bibi Rahiman to the plaintiff's father and uncle in 1855 included the 2-annas 6-gandas odd share of Bande Ali and, secondly, whether the compromise in the suit of 1875 made between Nandan Lal and Bande Ali was really part and parcel of a benami transaction wherein Bande Ali was acting merely as the benamidar of the plaintiff's father. With regard to the first point there was no direct documentary evidence showing a transfer of Bande Ali's share to Bibi Rahiman before 1855, and the only documentary evidence in support of this was a petition in 1861 whereby the plaintiff's father applied for registration of his name in respect of the 5-annas

13-gandas odd share purchased from Bibi Rahiman, in which he recites that this covered, in addition to the 2 annas 6 gandas odd which she received from her husband, the 2 annas 6 gandas transferred by Bande Ali as well as the 1-anna share transferred to her by Bibi Baharun. As the whole share of the family was an 8-annas share and as Bibi Rahiman admittedly acquired 3 annas 6 gandas odd from her husband and Bibi Baharun, there was no other source from which she could have acquired the other 2 annas 6 gandas, odd making up the 5 annas 13 gandas, except from Bande Ali unless she acquired Kasim Ali's share, and there was no evidence to show that Kasim Ali ever parted with his interest. On the other hand, the oral evidence went to show that Kasim Ali's share descended by inheritance to the plaintiff's father and uncle and ultimately to the plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge found all issues in favour of the defendants and dismissed the suit.

The District Judge took a different view of the facts and came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had made out his title to the whole 8-annas share including that originally held by Bande Ali, and that the transaction which took place at the date of the suit brought by Mathura Das in 1876 was a benami transaction in which Bande Ali merely represented the plaintiff's father.

It has been urged before us on behalf of the appellants that there is no real evidence to support these findings. It is contended that the recitals in the petition of 1861, when the plaintiff's father applied for registration of his name, are not admissible in evidence against Bande Ali and as no deed of transfer by Bande Ali to Bibi Rahiman has been produced, there is nothing from which it can be inferred that Bandi Ali ever did in fact part with his share. The plaintiff's case was that the deed of transfer had been lost but that nevertheless from all the circumstances of the case a legitimate inference might be drawn that his father had in fact acquired from Bibi Rahiman the share which originally belonged to Bande Ali and as the transfer of a 5-annas 13 gandas odd share from Bibi Rahiman had undoubtedly been proved and as he acquired by inheritance the 2-annas 6-gandas odd share of his grandfather Kasim Ali, this accounted for the whole 8-annas share. The further fact that Muhammad Haji in 1853 without any intervention on the part of Bande Ali had applied for and obtained a bitwara rubakar whereby the whole 8-annas share was divided into a separate patti supported this view. The learned District Judge did not come to any definite finding on this part of the case but based his decision upon the fact that when Mathura Das obtained his decree against the plaintiff's father and uncle in 1876 and got an attachment of the whole 8 annas share which was purchased by Nandan Lal, the arrangement then come to whereby Nandan Lal confessed judgment in the suits brought against him was an arrangement whereby it was intended to transfer the property to the plaintiff's father in the benami name of Bande Ali and others.

It is unnecessary to deal in detail with the evidence relied upon in support of this conclusion. There was undoubtedly evidence to support it to which the learned Judge refers. The only real attack made by the appellants against this part of the judgment was first that it was not competent to the plaintiff to contend that Bande Ali was acting as his benamidar, as the plaintiff's father admittedly lent himself to this transaction with a view to defeating his creditors, and secondly, that the decree in the suit brought by Bande Ali against Nandan Lal and the plaintiff's father and uncle in 1876 was res judicata and binding on all parties to that suit including the plaintiff's predecessors-in-title. In support of the first contention the appellants rely upon the case of Yaramati Krishnayya v. Chundru Papayya (1), where it was held under circumstances somewhat similar to the present that a plaintiff who had transferred his land to another in order to defeat an attaching creditor, the creditor subsequently consenting to a decree upholding the title of the transferee, was not entitled to a declaration that his name should be retained on the register as owner when the transferee had applied to be registered in his place. The authority of this case has been questioned and dissented from in the later case of Jadu Nath Poddar

(1) 20 M. 326; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 231.

v. Rup Lal Poddar (2), where Rampini and Mookerjee, JJ., held that where the mere intention to commit a fraud has not been carried into effect, a beneficial owner is entitled to sue for a declaration that a deed of transfer executed by him was merely a benami transaction. Although there has been some diversity of opinion upon the question, I think the decision in the later case expressed the true view. A transfer which is merely colourable and made with the intention of defrauding creditors can always be set aside by the transferor at any time before the fraud has actually taken place. But if the fraudulent intention has succeeded, the Courts will not assist either party claiming under such a transaction. In the present case it is shown that nobody in fact was defrauded and that the creditors of the plaintiff's father were all paid off. In my opinion the principle relied upon by the appellants on this part of the case has no application to the present circumstances.

With regard to the second point the question whether Bande Ali was acting as benamidar for the plaintiff's father was not raised or decided in that suit. The decree was merely passed in favour of the plaintiff upon the confession of judgment by Nandan Lal, the principal defendant. There seems to be no reason why the present plaintiff should be estopped from contending that Bande Ali was merely his benamidar. In my opinion this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

If a custom has been in existence for a long series of years, it cannot be extinguished by non-user. The fact that it has not been exercised for a long period may be a reason for doubting its existence, but that fact cannot be said to have put an end to it [p. 870, col. 1.]

Syed Shahenshah Husain Rizvi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These are four cases in which the plaintiff claims a right to two annas a year ground rent from persons occupying plots in the abadi on the basis of a customary right. The Court of first instance found that the plaintiff had not proved her title to the houses occupied by the defendants and secondly that she had not proved the alleged custom. It may be mentioned that the plaintiff attempted to prove the custom by an entry in the wajib-ul-arz made forty years ago and also by oral evidence. This oral evidence, which was disbelieved by the learned Munsif, consisted inter alia of the evidence of Aulad Ali, a mortgagee from the plaintiff, who had been in possession from 1888 to 1907. He stated that he had used the alleged right of the Zemindar to this ground rent to make the tenants work for him at a favourable rate and in consequence had not collected the ground rent. The learned Subordinate Judge of Urao in appeal, without going into the question of title, held that the custom was not proved and that in any case on the plaintiff's own evidence, if the custom had existed at the date of the wajib-ul-arz, it had ceased to exist by discontinuance. This latter finding of the Subordinate Judge cannot be supported. Aulad Ali's evidence, if believed, proves the subsistence of the custom, inasmuch as without the existence of that custom he could not have exacted labour from the tenants at a favourable rate The custom was the lever for such exaction. Apart from this if the custom was in existence at the date of the wajib-ul-arz it could not be extinguished by non-user. What the Court was asked to hold was that in 1840 a usage having the force of law, that is to say a custom, existed. The fact that an alleged custom has not been exercised for a long period may be a reason for doubting the existence of the custom, but the fact cannot be said to have put an end to the custom. There is a difference between a discontinuance of the right and a discontinuance of the use of the right. The lower Appellate Court was also wrong in law in stating that the tenants could not be bound by an entry in the wajib-ul-arz which was made in their absence. Settlement Officers were entitled to record custom and it must be presumed that they took the proper means to ascertain the existence of any custom recorded by them. See Riasat Ali v. Gokul (1). This does not mean, however, that the wajib-ul arz was necessarily conclusive proof against the tenants. See the Privy Council case, Thakur Anant Singh v. Thakur Durga Singh (2). Whether, however, the wajib-ul-arz alone was sufficient proof of custom is a question of fact. See Tilak Ram v. Sita Ram (3). The lower Court has stated that the wajib-ul-arz must have been recorded at the instance of the proprietors and consequently ought to be read with some reservation and hesitation where they recorded a custom against the interest of riaya. The lower Appellate Court, amongst the other reasons given for dismissing the appeals, appears to me to have adopted this reason also. There is, therefore, in my opinion, a concurrent finding of fact by both the Courts that the evidence of the wajib-ul-arz was not sufficient in this particular case to prove the custom and in second appeal I hold that I am bound by this finding. See Basdeo Singh v. Ram Phal Singh (4).

For the above reasons I dismiss these appeals with costs.

Where a plaintiff withdraws a suit against one of two defendants, and elects to proceed against the other, such withdrawal is not the withdrawal contemplated by Order XXIII, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 871, col. 1.]

Revision application from the order of the Cantonment Small Cause Court Judge, Karachi.

Mr. Tahilram Maniram, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.

PRATT, J. C.—This is an application for revision of an order made by the Cantonment Small Cause Court Judge, Karachi, dismissing the applicant's suit against the opponent Mazar.

DOOD MEHAR BIBI v. ASRUB ALI.

The applicant sued on a bond which was executed by the defendant No. 1 Mubarak as principal and defendant No. 2 Mazar as surety. The 1st defendant objected that the Court could not entertain the suit against him, because he resided beyond the local limits of its jurisdiction. The plaintiff then asked for leave under section 20 (b) of the Civil Procedure Code and on that leave being refused, the Court ordered that the plaint be returned f r presentation to the proper Court. The plaintiff then applied to drop the 1st defendant from the suit and to continue the suit against Mazar the surety. This was allowed, but the Court then dismissed the suit against the surety, holding that plaintiff had withdrawn the suit against the principal debtor and that the surety was discharged under section 134, Indian Contract Act.

No doubt, the order made by the Cantonment Small Cause Court Judge on plaintiff's applicati n to drop the 1st defendant was that the plaintiff withdraws the suit against 1st defendant. But we do not think that it was a withdrawal under Order XXIII, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, to which the consequence is attached that the plaintiff is precluded from instituting a fresh suit in respect of the same subject-matter. At the time when the Court made this order, there was no suit before the Court, for the Court had ordered that the plaint be returned. There could be no withdrawal of the suit, for the suit had not been entertained. The plaintiff's application amounts, in our opinion, only to this, that he desired his plaint to be restored to file as a suit against defendant No. 2 alone and the order allowing him to do so does not, in any way, affect his rights as against the principal debtor. The suit is maintainable against the surety, although no suit has been filed against the principal. Sankana Kalana v. Viru Pakshapa(1), and that is the position here.

We accordingly reverse the decree of the Cantonment Small Cause Court Judge and remand the suit for disposal on the merits. Costs to be costs in the cause.

Decree reversed and suit remanded.

Muhammadan Law—Minor—Guardian, de facto, of person and property of minor, powers of—Alienation by de facto guardian of minor's property, validity of—Ejectment, suit for, by purchaser, maintainability of.

Under the Muhammadan Law a person who has charge of the person and property of a minor without being his legal guardian and who may be called a de facto guardian, has no power to convey to another any right or interest in immoveable property belonging to the minor which the transferee can enforce against the minor; nor can such transferee, if let into possession of property under such unauthorized transfer, resist an action in ejectment on behalf of the minor as a trespasser. It follows, therefore, that, being himself without title, such person cannot seek to recover property purchased by him from the de facto guardian in possession of another equally without title. Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Tipperah, dated the 6th February 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Court, Comilla, dated the 6th February 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Upendra Kumar Roy, for the Appellants, submitted that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover possession of the 8-annas share in the disputed property. No doubt Aftabuddin was the de facto guardian of the minors, but sale by Aftabuddin on behalf of the minors would not be binding on the minors and could not affect their interests in the property, because under the Muhammadan Law a de facto guardian as such could not alienate any interest in the minor's property, and if any such transfer were made it would be void. Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (1) referred to.

(1) 47 Ind. Cas. 513; 23 C. W. N. 50; 35 M. L. J. 422; 16 A. L. J. 800; 24 M. L. T. 330; 28 C L. J. 409; 5 P. L. W. 276; 20 Bom. L. R. 1022; 45 I. A. 73 (P. C.); 45 C. 878; (1919) M. W. N. 91; 9 L. W. 518,

The sale by the de facto guardian could not bind the minor under any circumstances. Hyderman Kutti v. Syed Ali (2) referred to. The rulings relied on by the lower Appellate Court, namely, the cases of Ram Charan Sanyal v. Anukul Chandra Acharya (3) and Hasan Ali v. Mehdi Husain (4), have been considered by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (1). So far as the widow's share was concerned, it has not been transferred at all. The question of acquiescence or ratification by the minors after they attained majority did not and could not arise under the circumstances of the case. The shares of the plaintiffs could not be affected by the transfer made by Aftabuddin.

Babu Birendra Chandra Das, for the Respondents, urged that the lower Appellate Court had rightly held that the alienation made by Aftabuddin for legal necessity and for the benefit of the minors was binding on the minors. The Privy Council case in Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (1) was distinguishable, because the questions of legal necessity and benefit to the minors did not arise in that case. The decision of the Court below was right, because the finding was that the transfer had been made to meet unavoidable family necessities. So far as the widow's share was concerned, she acquiesced in the transfer and so could not avoid the alienation. Lastly, what was sold by Aftabuddin was sold by him on his own behalf and not on behalf of the plaintiffs and so the minors were not affected by the sale. Aftabuddin was competent to transfer the specific portion of the property of which he was in possession.

Babu Upendra Kumar Roy briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—It is admitted on both sides that the property in this suit belonged to two brothers, Gobardi and Aftabuddin, and that on the death of the former which took place fourteen years ago, his heirs, the plaintiffs, lived with Aftabuddin. They were minors at the time excepting plaintiff No. 1, who is the widow of Gobardi. After his brother's death Aftabuddin sold the land in question which is $2\frac{1}{2}$ kanis out of 12 kanis of their ijmali jote to the principal defendants by a kobala (Exhibit A) dated the 5th Falgoon 1311. The sale purports to be on Aftabuddin's own behalf upon the allegation that the land belonged to him. The reason for the sale is stated to have been to pay off certain creditors and the landlord's dues.

The plaintiffs sought a declaration of title and recovery of possession with regard to 8 annas of the land in dispute. A case was set up on behalf of the purchaser from Aftabuddin that although the sale purported to be a sale of Aftabuddin's own land, yet as the sale took place and the infants benefited by the sale, it ought to be held that the plaintiffs, although then minors, were bound by the sale. So far as the widow is concerned, defence was taken that although the sale did not purport to be on her behalf, yet she ought to be held to be bound on the ground that she had acquiesced in the sale and had taken no steps to set it aside. A further ground was taken that after the sale Aftabuddin relinquished the land and, therefore, inasmuch as the plaintiffs had not paid rent after such relinquishment, it ought to be considered that their tenancy was at an end and they were not entitled to maintain a suit in ejectment.

As regards the first point the learned Subordinate Judge in appeal held that the Privy Council ruling in Mata Din v. Ahmad Ali (5) left the question open, whether a sale by a de facto guardian, if shown to be for the benefit of the infants, was void or voidable. He followed the ruling in Ram Charan Sanyal v. Anukul Chandra Acharya (3) and Hasan Ali v. Mehdi Husain (4) that such a sale bound the minors under the Muhammadan Law. The matter, however, has been put at rest by the case of Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (1). Their Lordships said that there was a conflict of opinion in the different High Courts with regard to the matter, one set of decisions purported to give such dealings a qualified force the other declared them wholly void and ineffective. In the former class of cases the main test for determining the validity of the particular transaction had been the benefit resulting from it to the minor, in the latter the admitted absence of authority or power on the part of the guardian to alienate or to encumber the minor's property. They say, the time has now come to lay down a definite rule, if possible. They then refer to the decision of the Calcutta High Court and say that in sustaining transactions entered into by de facto guardians this Court has proceeded mainly on considerations of necessity for and benefit to the infant. The other High Courts, generally speaking, have cut the Gordian knot by holding that all such dealings with a minor's property were void. They then discuss the Madras High Court case, Hyderman Kutti v. Syed Ali (2), and hold that, under the Muhammadan Law, a person who has charge of the person and property of a minor without being his legal guardian and who may, therefore, be conveniently called a de facto guardian, has no power to convey to another any right or interest in immoveable property which the transferee can enforce against the infant; nor can such transferee, if let into possession of property under such unauthorised transfer, resist an action in ejectment on behalf of the infant as a trespasser. It follows that, being himself without title, he cannot seek to recover property in the possession of another equally without title. I think that that finally disposes of the first point.

The next point is about the widow. The kobala did not purport to sell her share. There is no defence that Aftabuddin claimed any authority on her behalf to sell her share or that he could in any manner whatever give any title to the purchaser so far as her share was concerned. The suggestion of acquiescence, so far as the lady is concerned, is absolutely of no value. The relinquishment, if any, was by Aftabuddin. He purported to deal with his own land and such relinquishment cannot possibly bind the infants or the widow. The learned Subordinate Judge has dealt with this point on the ground of acquiescence or ratification so far as the plaintiff No. 2, the minor son of Gobardi who has now attained majority, is concerned. There is no question of ratification that arises in this case so far as he is concerned. We do not think it can be said that there has been any effective relinquishment so far as the plaintiffs are concerned.

The last point which has been urged is that the entire jote being 12 kanis, the plaintiffs are only entitled to 1/6th. They may have 1/6th out of the remainder of the land; and as Aftabuddin purported to deal with his own land the plaintiffs had no cause of action. That overlooks the fact that the defendant purchaser himself based his case alleging that Aftabuddin dealt with the land which belonged to himself and his brother Gobardi and that by such sale the shares of Gobardi's heirs had been affected. It is undivided land and the plaintiffs are entitled to the declaration and relief that they pray for. It will still be open to the purchaser to get his remedies as against Aftabuddin for the quantity of land which has now been declared to belong to the plaintiffs.

The appeal is decreed. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the Munsif restored with costs of this Court and of the lower Appellate Court.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53—Transfer pendente lite, validity of—Delaying or defeating creditors—Intention.

There is nothing in section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act or in any other provision of the law to prevent a defendant in a suit from transferring either for consideration or voluntarily his property to another, unless the effect is shown to be that his creditors are defeated or delayed. Such a transfer made during the pendency of a suit, when obviously the defendant was in possession of ample funds with which to pay off his creditors, is not a fraudulent transaction nor a transaction entered into with the object of defeating his creditors. [p. 874, col. 2; p. 875, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—In my opinion this appeal must be allowed. The plaintiffs brought this suit to have it declared that the defendants Nos. 4 to 11, against whom the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 had obtained a money decree, had no right, title or interest in certain property which was attached by the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 as decree-holders in execution of that decree. The facts of the case are shortly these, that the defendant No. 11, who was one of the judgment-debtors in the suit brought by the defendants Nos. 1 to 3, owned certain properties and amongst others the property in suit in this case. After the suit was instituted which was in September 1911 but before any decree had been made in that suit, the defendant No. 11, an old lady and grandmother of the plaintiffs, executed a deed of gift in favour of the plaintiffs, in respect to the property now in suit. It is not suggested that the defendant No. 11 was in straitened circumstances or that she was not able either at that time or at any time subsequently to pay off such creditors as she may have had, including the defendants Nos. 1 to 3. According to the findings of the Subordinate Judge it appears that in addition to the property in question she had a 5 annas 4 pies share in village Narainpur, a zarpeshgi right in village Fanusra, various sale certificates showing her right to certain kasht lands and decrees standing in her name, and it does not appear that there is a word of evidence throughout the case to show that she was in any way unable to meet all her liabilities at the date when this decree was passed and when the property in question was attached, or at the time when she transferred the property by deed of gift to the plaintiffs in the year 1912. In these circumstances the learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that in the present suit the plaintiffs had made out their case and were entitled to judgment. There is another matter which I ought also to mention and that is this, that out of the total decretal amount of Rs. 1,092 the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 had already realised a sum of Rs. 768, leaving a balance of something less than one third of the total decretal amount still due.

When the matter came before the District Judge, he seems to have thought that the fact that the defendant No. 11 had plenty of other property out of which her creditors could be satisfied, was not a material matter to be taken into consideration in arriving at a conclusion as to whether the transfer was in fact one made with intent to delay or defeat creditors. He says that because the Subordinate Judge had based his decision upon a consideration of this question, he had entirely missed the whole point of the case and that the Judge of the trial Court had omitted to consider what the learned District Judge said were the relevant dates in the case and that once you consider the relevant dates, it must at once in his opinion put the plaintiffs out of Court. Then he gives the dates which he considers relevant in this case. They are these, the suit out of which the decree arose was instituted on the 20th September 1911, that is the suit by the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 against the remaining defendants. The defendant No. 11 filed her written statement on the 8th March 1912. The judgment was delivered on the 30th July 1912, the decree was made on the 31st July and the deed of gift is dated the 9th May 1912, that is after the filing of the written statement and before delivery of judgment. The Judge says when we consider these facts and also the fact that the father of the donees signed the written statement for the lady, it is impossible to hold that the deed was bona fide. He added: "No Court could look at a deed executed in such circumstances, and I am surprised to find an experienced Judicial Officer doing so."

It is difficult to see how the learned District Judge could possibly have come to the conclusion that this transfer in the circumstances of this case, where the lady was obviously in possession of ample funds out of which to pay off her creditors, must be taken to have been a fraudulent transaction or a transaction entered into with the object of defeating her creditors, merely because it took place at a date when a suit was pending against her. There is absolute, ly nothing in the provisions of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, nor indeed in any other Statute or law that I am aware of, which prevents a defendant in a suit from transferring either for consideration or voluntarily his property to another, unless the effect is shown to be that the creditors are defeated or delayed. The only evidence upon which the learned Judge has come to the conclusion that this is a transfer in order to defeat creditors is the fact that the transfer took place when a suit unconnected with the transferred property was pending, and it almost looks as if the learned Judge in considering the effect of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, if indeed he did consider it, was mixing it up in his own mind with the preceding section, viz., section 52, but however that may be, it is quite clear that he based his decision upon evidence which was clearly no ground for arriving at the conclusion to which he came. He even goes to the length of saying that it makes no difference that the lady may have had other property. To my mind it makes all the difference in the world because if it is shown that the defendant in suit is well off, that is a very material circumstance in considering whether the transfer was governed by section 53. In the present case there is clearly no evidence at all to support the conclusion arrived at by the District Judge and, in my opinion, this appeal must be allowed, the decree of the District Judge must be set aside, and that of the Subordinate Judge restored. The respondents have not appeared and the appeal is, therefore, allowed without costs.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption. It appears that Jaskaran Singh was the Talukdar of Bajehra and owned among other villages the three villages now in suit. He had two brothers, Balbhaddar Singh and Ratan Singh, who were living jointly with him, but the Kabuliyat of the Taluqa stood in the name of Jaskaran Singh.

Jaskaran Singh was killed in 1838 A. D. He left a widow, Musammat Gulab Kuar, and a daughter by her, Musammat Fateh Kuar, who was married to Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh. After the death of Jaskaran Singh, Balbhadhar Singh held the estate up to 1256 Fasli. In that year there was some arrangement by which Musammat Gulab Kuar was put in possession of fifteen villages including the three villages now in suit and Ratan Singh was put in possession of fifteen other villages, while the remainder remained in the possession of Balbhaddar Singh (Exhibit 2). On the 5th Zilhijja 1262 Fasli, corresponding with the 19th August 1855 A. D., Gulab Kuar, Sheodan Singh (son of Balbhaddar Singh) and Ratan Singh jointly executed a mortgage-deed of the three villages now in suit along with five other villages in favour of Guman Singh for Rs. 2,401. The property mortgaged was the right, title and interest of Musammat Gulab Kuar alone in the said villages. Sheodan Singh appears to have signed the mortgage deed on behalf of his father, Balbhaddar Singh, who was then in confinement for non-payment of revenue. Ratan Singh affixed his own seal. None of the villages assigned to Balbhaddar Singh or Ratan Singh was included in the mortgage. No effort appears to have been made by Guman Singh to obtain possession under the mortgage till 1863, when he filed a suit for possession of the village Sheorakhi not now in suit, alleging that by virtue of a compromise filed at the time of the summary settlement he was entitled to proprietary possession of that village in full satisfaction of his mortgagee rights in that and other villages. During the pendency of that suit Musammat Gulab Kuar sold her rights in the three villages now in dispute to her son-in-law Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh. The Settlement Officer upheld the right of Guman Singh to obtain possession of the village Sheorakhi, but on appeal the Financial Commissioner set aside that decision and allowed Guman Singh a decree for possession as mortgagee of the eight villages mortgaged with him.

Before Guman Singh could, however, obtain possession of the mortgaged property, Musammat Gulab Kuar filed a suit for redemption of the mortgage which was compromised on the 4th October 1866; the effect of the compromise being that Guman Singh was granted the village Sheorakhi in proprietary right in consideration of his surrendering his mortgagee rights in the other villages mortgaged and Musammat Gulab Kuar was allowed to retain possession over the latter. Two days later Musammat Gulab Kuar died. Her son-in-law Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh had died in the previous year. The villages in dispute remained in possession of Musammat Fateh Kuar after the death of her mother.

In 1867 Balbhaddar Singh sued Musammat Fateh Kuar for possession of the villages now in suit along with some other villages, claiming the same as the reversionary heir of Jaskaran Singh. He excluded from the claim the village Sheorakhi which had already been given to Guman Singh in satisfaction of his mortgage. On the death of Balbhaddar Singh, Ratan Singh continued the suit but he was unsuccessful, the decision being that the villages claimed had been validly sold by Musammat Gulab Kuar to Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh and that Musammat Fateh Kuar was entitled to hold possession of the said villages as the heir of Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh in her own right (Exhibit F-15). From Musammat Fateh Kuar the villages in dispute passed by virtue of a gift to her step-daughter, Musammat Muna Kuar, who was succeeded by her husband, Gandharap Singh.

In 1883 Uman Prasad sued Gandharap Singh for possession of the said villages, claiming that he was entitled to succeed to the property left by Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh on the death of Musammat Fateh Kuar, inasmuch as Musammat Muna Kuar was excluded by custom and Musammat Feteh Kuar had no right to make a gift in her favour. That suit was decreed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Uman Parshad v. Gandharp Singh (1). The villages in dispute have since then been in the possession of Uman Prasad and after him in that of his sons, Gajadhar Bakhsh Singh and Ganesh Bakhsh Singh, now represented by defendants Nos. 4 to 7.

The plaintiffs-appellants are the legal representatives of Sheodan Singh and Ratan Singh. Their contention is that Musammat Gulab Kuar had no right to sell the villages in dispute to Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh and the plaintiffs-appellants are entitled to the possession of the said villages on payment of the money due on the mortgage of the 19th August 1855, which Musammat Gulab Kuar redeemed by transferring one of the villages mortgaged to the mortgagee in proprietary right in consideration of his surrendering his mortgagee rights in the other villages mortgaged. The Courts below dismissed the claim.

The first question for consideration is whether Musammat Gulab Kuar had any proprietary right in the villages in question which she could have sold to Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh. The decree of the Settlement Officer dated the 31st August 1866 (Exhibit F-9) is conclusive on the point. It was upheld on appeal (Exhibit F-12). By virtue of that decree Musammat Gulab Kuar and her heirs were awarded absolute proprietary rights in the villages in suit and other villages. Balbhaddar Singh was a party to that decree and he and his successors-in-interest are bound by it. The attempt made by Balbhaddar Singh on the death of Musammat Gulab Kuar to obtain possession of the said villages as the reversionary heir of Jaskaran Singh, the husband of Musammat Gulab Kuar, in 1867 (Exhibit F-13) was equally unsuccessful, the finding in that suit, which was continued after the death of Balbhaddar Singh by his brother, Ratan Singh, having been that Musammat Gulab Kuar held an absolute right which she could have sold to Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh (Exhibit F-15). In 1904 there was another litigation arising out of a claim made by the descendants of Balbhaddar Singh for possession of some of the villages in dispute against Gajadhar Bakhsh and Ganesh Baksh, the sons of Uman Prasad. That suit was dismissed on the ground that Musummat Fateh Kuar was excluded from inheritance by a tribal custom and that the claim was barred by limitation. There was a further finding that the mental unsoundness of Sheodan Singh, son of Balbhaddar Singh, was not shown to have continued till his death in 1889 and the claim was in that view of the case too barred by time (Exhibits F-31 to F-33). In face of those judgments it cannot be said that the plaintiffs have any subsisting title left to the property which Musammat Gulab Kuar redeemed in her own right.

The next question is whether as a representative in-interest of the other co-mortgagors they have a right to redeem the property from the hands of the successors in interest of Musammat Gulab Kuar. It appears from the mortgage deed that no portion of the mortgaged property belonged to Sheodan Singh and Ratan Singh, the co-mortgagors of Musammat Gulab Kuar. The property mortgaged belonged solely to the latter. Sheodan Singh and Ratan Singh were probably joined as co mortgagors in order to protect the rights of the mortgagee from any possible claim by them to the property mortgaged by Musammat Gulab Kuar. On Musammat Gulab Kuar redeeming the mortgage of the villages in question by transferring the village Sheorakhi to Guman Singh in lieu of the mortgage money in absolute right, the mortgage became extinguished; and if Sheodan Singh and Ratan Singh or their legal representatives had any right in the property after its redemption by Musammat Gulab Kuar, the adverse possession held by Musammat Gulab Kuar and her successors-in-interest has lasted long enough to extinguish that right, which is no longer enforceable. In Makhdum Khan v. Musammat Jadi (2) which has been followed in Muhammad Taqi v. Muhammad Bagir (3), it was held that when one of several co mortgagors redeemed the entire mortgage and obtained possession of the mortgaged property, Article 144 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) applied to suits by the other co-mortgagors for the recovery of possession of their shares from him. The same view was taken in Sambu v. Nama (4). The decisions in Moidin v. Osthumangani (5) and Ramchandra Yashvant Sirpotdar v. Sadashiv Abaji Sirpotdar (6) recognise that an adverse title can be set up by the redeeming co-mortgagor under certain circumstances. A different view was taken in Ashfaq Ahmad v. Wazir Ali (7), Khiali Ram v. Tulk Ram (8) and Wazir Ali v. Ali Islam (9). But it may be doubted whether a charge, such as is created by section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act, can remain alive after twelve years so as to stop the acquisition of an adverse title, and whether Article 148 of the Indian Limitation Act can be applied to the redemption of such a charge as against a co-mortgagor.

The circumstances proved in this case moreover preclude the idea that Sheodan Singh and Ratan Singh, through whom the plaintiffs claim to have derived their title, had an interest in the mortgaged property and if they have no interest, there is nothing which the plaintiffs can redeem from the successors-in-interest of Musammat Gulab Kuar. They have no right to claim through Musammat Gulab Kuar or her husband.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Tort—Conversion of goods—Damages, assessment of —Admission by Pleader, whether binding on client.

In an action for conversion the Court, in assessing the damages, is not limited to the value of the property at the time of conversion, but may find as damages the value at a subsequent time, even up to the date of trial, and in assessing damages it may take into account the conduct of the defendant. [p. 878, col. 2.]

An erroneous admission on a point of law made by the Pleader of a party prior to the filing of a suit is not binding on that party. [p. 878, col. 2; p. 879, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decision of the Additional Judicial Commissioner, Sind.

Mr. Gulabrai Nihalchand, for the Appellants.

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojrai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It has been held by the lower Court that appellants, Messrs. Louis Dreyfus & Co., misappropriated a large quantity of wheat belonging to the respondents, in spite of the fact of their having previously rejected the goods and cancelled the contract under which they were tendered; also that this was done without justification, in order to benefit by a sensational rise in the market after the war started in August 1914. Appellants' Pleader has not questioned these findings before us, but has confined himself to contending that the damages awarded should be reduced. The price of wheat rose from rate of Rs. 31-6 0 on 4th August 1914 to one of Rs. 49 9-0 on the 7th February 1915. On the 28th August, the actual date of conversion, it was Rs. 33-12-0. On the 17th December, after which date the goods were shipped to England by appellants, it was Rs. 42. Respondents claimed damages at the latter rate. The learned Additional Judicial Commissioner awarded Rs. 4,500 as damages, which sum works out to a rate of about Rs. 40. Appellants' Pleader contends that the rate should be reduced to one of Rs. 33-12-0, which was that of the date of conversion. If the damages were for breach of contract, then no doubt his contention would be correct, for the measure of damages in such a case is the difference between the contract price and the market price at the date of the breach, and is unaffected by a subsequent rise in prices, see Jamal v. Moolla Dawood, Sons & Co. (1). But this is an action in tort for conversion, and in such a case, according to the recognised law in England, the Court or Jury, in assessing the damages, is not limited to the value of the property at the time of conversion, but may find as damages the value at a subsequent time, even up to the date of trial, see Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume X, Article 633 at page 344, and Volume XXVII, Article 1602 at page 903; Mayne on Damages, 9th Edition, page 410; Addison on Torts, 7th Edition, page 511. There is also a further difference between the two cases. In actions of contract, as a rule, the motives or conduct of the defendant are not to be taken into account in assessing damages whereas in actions of tort which affect property, the conduct of the defendant may be so taken into account (Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume X, Articles 593 and 598 at pages 323, 325).

On both these grounds we think there is no sufficient reason for an interference with the damages actually awarded. There is also, as pointed out in the judgment of the Court below, reason to believe that appellants actually realised more than the amount for which they have been made liable; and if the sale price had been disclosed, the Court might have held this to be a proper measure of damages, cf. Bansidhar v. Sant Lal (2).

It is true that on the 31st August 1914 respondents' Pleaders wrote threatening to hold appellants responsible at the rate prevailing on the 27th to 29th August. But appellants in replying denied all liability and told respondents' Pleaders they might take whatever steps they deemed necessary. At the most the claim put forward on 31st August amounts to an erroneous admission on a point of law made by re-

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—In this case the defendant borrowed money from a Chetty on a promissory note secured by a deposit of title deeds. The Chetty endorsed the promissory note to the plaintiff for collection and at the same time gave him the title-deeds, and the plaintiff sued on the equitable mortgage. Bakewell, J., has given him a decree holding that, under section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act, the security passed to the plaintiff with the debt and that the objection that the transfer of the mortgage interest was a sale and required registration under section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act did not arise. In this he was clearly right. He also referred to my decision in Dwarka Doss v. Danakoti Ammal (1), following Subramaniam v. Perumal Reddi (2), that even if there had been consideration for the transfer of the debt, the mortgage security would have passed with it, although that decision had been questioned obiter by Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., in Ramasami Pattar v. Chinnan Asari (3). As this last decision has been dissented from in Allahabad, with reference to Bhashyam Aiyangar, J.'s dictum, and as this provision of the section has received very little consideration, it may be as well to point out that in that dictum the learned Judge makes no reference to the provisions of section 8. Having pointed out that the transfer of an equity of redemption for consideration was the sale of an intangible thing within the meaning of section 54, he said the same thing about the transfer of the mortgagee's interest and expressed his dissent, without further discussion, from Subramaniam v. Perumal Reddi (2). It seems to me, with great respect, that the learned Judge gave too little weight to the provisions of section 8, if indeed he considered them at all. Those provisions of the section, which are new and were not, like the earlier part of the section, taken from the Conveyancing Act, 1881, are an application of a general rule of jurisprudence taken from the civil law and variously expressed in such maxims, as res accessoria sequitur rem principalem or accessorium non ducit, sed sequitur suum principalum Co. Litt 152 a. Though in Walker v. Jones (4) the Privy Council declined to say that in England the mortgage security could never be separated from the mortgage debt, Lindley, L. J., in Patrick, In re (5) was inclined to hold that a transfer of the security might be implied from a transfer of the debt; and in the note to this section in Mr. Ghose's Law of Mortgage it is stated that this is the law in America. It is clearly inconvenient that the security should be separated from the debt, and should remain in the hands of the transferor who has no further interest in it. The Legislature has, therefore, seen fit to enact that, unless a contrary intention is expressed or necessarily implied, the transfer of the debt shall pass forthwith the securities therefor, that is to say, by a statutory transfer without further act of the parties. Securities in the section must obviously include mortgages of immoveable property which are the most valuable class of securities, and the operation of this beneficial Statute cannot, in my opinion, be cut down and practically nullified by the provisions of section 54, which require transfers of immoveable property or intangible things by way of sale to be in a particular form.

Section 54 applies to transfers by act of parties and does not cover statutory transfer such as that provided in section 8 on grounds of policy and convenience. In any case the rule of construction contained in the maxim generalia specialibus non derogant is sufficient to show that the general provisions of section 54 as to sales by act of parties cannot be construed as affecting the express provisions of section 8 as to the transfer of the securities being attendant on the transfer of the debt. Section 8 speaks of a "debt or other actionable claim", and it has been argued that its operation has been affected by the definition of 'actionable claim' inserted in the Act in 1900, which excludes debts secured by the mortgage of immoveable or moveable property. The section, however, applies in terms to secured debts, whether they are actionable claims or not, and if the Legislature had desired to repeal this provision entirely, it would have done so. Full effect must, no doubt, be given to the legislative provisions which make registration essential to the validity of certain transactions in India, or render unregistered documents inadmissible in evidence in proving such transactions. The ordinary rules of statutory construction must nonetheless be applied to the provisions of section 8, even if the result should be to permit unregistered transfer of mortgages. In the present case the debt has been transferred by the endorsement of the promissory note and the equitable mortgage passed with it. Seeing that the equitable mortgage was created by deposit of title-deeds without registration, the anomaly would be if the transfer required registration.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

NAPIER, J.—The assignment in this case was admittedly not for consideration but for collection. It is not, therefore, covered by any of the chapters special to certain classes of transfer in the Transfer of Property Act. Section 9 accordingly applies and the documents having been delivered with an intention to transfer, there is a legal transfer and title passed. I, therefore, agree that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Confession, value of—Corroboration, whether necessary—Court, duty of.

The law does not require that the confession of an accused person should be corroborated before it can be acted upon. It is for the Court to decide whether it believes a confession or not.

Criminal revision by the Local Government against the order of the 1st Additional Sessions Judge, Aligarh, dated the 23rd May 1919.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Additional Sessions Judge has tried this case carefully and has taken into consideration every point that can be taken in favour of the accused persons. We wish to point out to him that he is in error in referring to the principle of law "that an accused person should not be convicted merely upon a retracted confession unless there is corroboration of the confession by other evidence.' There is no such principle of law. The proper rule is laid down in the case which he quotes, namely, Emperor v. Kehri (1). It is for the Court to decide whether it believes a confession or not. That is all. The law does not require any corroboration. Naturally a Court is more likely to believe a confession if it is corroborated, but the learned Additional Sessions Judge should disabuse his mind of the erroneous impression that the law requires any corroboration. It does not. However, the fact that the learned Additional Sessions Judge has strained points in favour of the accused persons whom he has acquitted, makes his conviction of those whom he has convicted even stronger, and we are satisfied that he rightly convicted the two appellants Dhani and Diwan of complicity in this serious dacoity. But the learned Additional Sessions Judge must understand that in cases of this nature the sentences should be substantial. Here we have a dacoity in which Lachman, the owner of the house attacked who was a lame man, was stabbed and in which Lachman's aged mother was severely beaten The sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment for men concerned in such a dastardly outrage is obviously insufficient. We enhance the sentences passed on both Dhani and Diwan to a sentence of ten (10) years' rigorous imprisonment.

Sentence enhanced.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 147, 148—Rioting with common object of causing obstruction to measurement of khas mahal land—Burden of proof—Possession of disputed land not affirmatively proved, effect of.

In a criminal case the burden of proving the charge substantially as drawn lies on the prosecution. [p. 884, col. 1.]

The common object of the unlawful assembly of which the petitioners were said to have been members and for which they were convicted by the lower Court under sections 147 and 148, Indian Penal Code was to cause obstruction to measurement and demarcation of khas mahal land by a kanungo and a khas mahal tahsildar. The land in question had lain fallow up to the date of the occurrence, and there was considerable doubt whether the prosecution had established that on the date of the occurrence actual possession of the land was with the Government:

Held, that having regard to the condition of the land and the nature of the acts of possession on which the parties relied, it was not established affirmatively that the land on which the alleged riot took place was in the actual possession of the Government, and that, therefore, the charge as alleged was not proved, and the petitioners were not guilty of rioting with the common object stated in the charge. JUDGMENT.

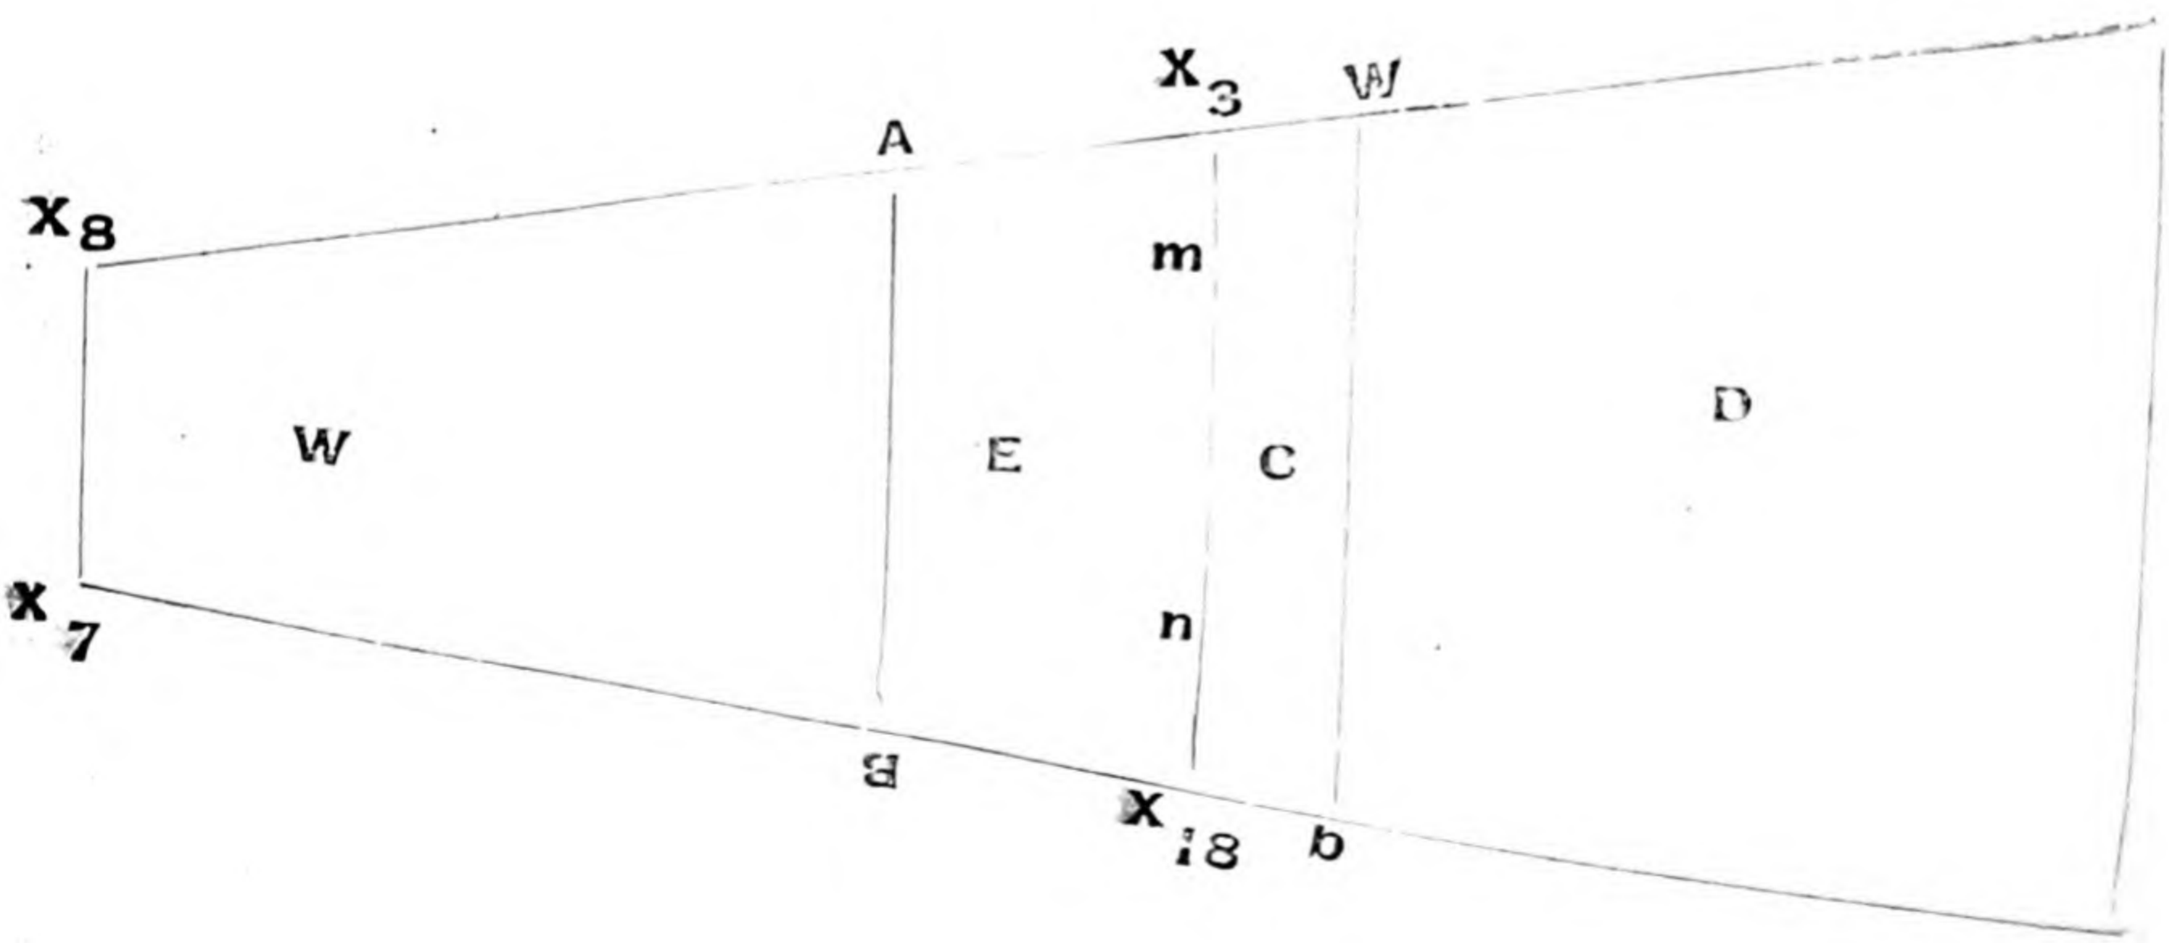
RICHARDSON, J.—The petitioner Umed Ali has been convicted under section 148, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to undergo three months' rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 400 or in default to undergo a further period of six months' rigorous imprisonment; the remaining six petitioners have been convicted under section 147, Indian Penal Code: the sentences passed upon three of them are the same as the sentence passed upon Umed Ali. The remaining three have been sentenced each to undergo three months' rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 200 or in default to undergo a further period of three months' rigorous imprisonment. The Rule called upon the District Magistrate of Faridpore to show cause why the convictions and sentences should not be set aside on the ground that regard being had to the facts found and the circumstances in evidence, the Sessions Judge erred in law in coming to the conclusion that possession of the land in question was with the Khas Mahal authorities and that in consequence the conviction of the petitioners on the charge of rioting as framed could not in law be sustained or why such other or further order should not be made as might seem fit to this Court.

The common object of the unlawful assembly of which the petitioners are said to have been members is stated in the charge to have been to cause obstruction to measurement and demarcation of Khas Mehal land by Kanongo Babu Asutosh Das Gupta and Khas Mahal Tahsildar Babu Lalit Mohan Acharjee. The charge assumes as a fact that the land on which the alleged riot took place is land belonging to the Government as a Khas Mahal. The land no doubt forms part of an area shown in the Thak map of 1857 as Government Estate No. 380, Bhattichar Baludhun. The estate is surrounded by lands belonging to the Patpasar Zemindars, of whom the principal present representative appears to be Maijuddin Biswas. The following rough sketch map shows the portion of the land to which the dispute relates.



The plot marked D is admittedly a portion of the Government estate. The next strip of land to the west (C) is also now admitted to be a part of the Government estate. C is bounded on the east by the line W*b* and on the west by the line X3, X18. To the west of C there are two plots marked E and W and the occurrence took place on W.

Formerly the Government estate appears to have been leased out to the Patpasur Zemindars as Ijaradars. In the year 1878 and the following years some attempt apparently was made to assess revenue under Act IX of 1847 on the western portion of the land; that is on plots C, E and W. Finally, however, that attempt was abandoned and that portion of the land, C, E and W, remained in the possession of the Patpasur Zemindars, who apparently claimed that it was a part of their own estate Char Durgapur. They even laid claim to the plot marked D and litigated that claim in the Civil Courts. They did not, however, succeed in establishing their title to D.

As I have said, they remained in possession of C, E and W and when the Government estate was settled or resettled in 1895, that portion, C, E and W, was excluded from the settlement.

In 1907, the whole of the land including plot D was diluviated. In 1911 the land began to re form and an island appeared extending, it is said, from a point in D to a point in E of which the Khas Mahal authorities took possession. By 1913 or at the latest by February 1914 the whole of the land had reformed.

It is alleged on the side of the prosecution that in the year 1913 possession was taken on behalf of the Government with the consent of the Patpasur Maliks or of Maijuddin Biswas of an area which included lands in E and W. It is further stated that in the years 1912, 1913, 1914 and 1915 the grass growing on the whole of the reformed area was sold by auction by the Khas Mahal authorities and purchased by Maijuddin Biswas.

In July 1915 settlement proceedings were commenced by the Khas Mahal Officer, Babu Profulla Chandra Gupta, and the settlement was concluded in April 1916. It is not disputed that this officer excluded the lands in plots E and W from the area which he settled as forming the Government estate.

I should also mention that between the years 1904 and 1910 a survey was made of the whole district on the basis of which a Record of Rights was published in 1912-1913. The maps including Exhibit XI prepared by the Settlement Authorities in these years appear to show that the western boundary of the Government estate was the line marked on the sketch map X3, X18. The Records of Right therefore, so far as it goes is in favour of the claim made by Maijuddin Biswas to the lands in E and W. During the period of the Record of Rights, however, the lands had for the most part been under water.

In the years 1916 and 1917 there was no sale by the Khas Mahal authorities of the grass grown on E and W. It is not very clear by whom the grass was taken.

In September 1916 Babu Profulla Chandra Gupta, the Khas Mehal Officer, was transferred and was succeeded in that post by Babu Brojendra Kumar Gupta. In March 1917 Brojendra Babu discovered that the lands in E and W had been excluded from the settlement made by Profulla Babu. On the 1st April 1917 he reported the matter to the Collector, Mr. Dunlop, who on the 3rd April ordered possession to be taken. Possession was taken on the following day, i.e., the 4th April, by an Amin who perambulated the boundaries, posted bamboos and had a drum beaten. This was done without notice to the Patpasur Zemindars. In June of the same year the Khas Mahal authorities seem to have taken effective possession of the land in E. In July, Brojendra Babu is said to have selected tenants for the lands in W and to have allotted holdings to those tenants; at the time, however, the land in W was more or less under water. On the 11th November an Amin went to plot W to point out the plots allocated by Brojendra Babu to the different tenants. There was another visit paid on the 12th. The riot took place on the 13th. The lands in W had lain fallow up to then and the question is who was in actual possession of it on the day of the riot.

PANCHANON BOSE v. EMPEROR.

If we assume, without deciding, that at the time of the Thak Survey in 1857 the true title was with the Government, the possession of the Patpasur Zemindars from sometime before 1895 to 1907 would be that of trespassers. When the land was submerged, according to well-settled principles of law, the constructive possession would revert to the true title and it may be that on the re appearance of the land in the year 1913 or a little later actual possession was also with the Government. It is not easy, however, to say who was in actual possession in the years 1916 and 1917. Apparently possession was during these years recovered by or on behalf of the Patpasur Zemindars, and there is at least a doubt whether in the then state of the land they were deprived of the possession so obtained by anything which was done on the 3rd April 1917. The error into which the learned Sessions Judge appears to have fallen in this connection is that he failed sufficiently to appreciate that in a criminal case the burden of proving the charge substantially as drawn lay on the prosecution. He seems to have thought that he had to decide, as in a civil case, on the balance of the evidence whether on the day of the occurrence actual possession lay with the Government or with the Patpasur Zemindars.

Regard being had to the condition of the land and the nature of the acts of possession on which the parties rely, the question of possession may on the principle already adverted to depend on the further question in which side the true title resides. That question is not one upon which a definite opinion can be expressed on the materials on the present record. It is eminently a question for the Civil Court to determine with reference to the whole history of the land. That being the position, it appears to me that there is at least considerable doubt whether the prosecution has established that on the date of the occurrence actual possession of the land in plot W lay with the Government.

In this connection I may add that no doubt, when it comes to a scramble for land, the Government may be at a disadvantage as compared with a private Zemindar because the representative of the Government cannot, or ought not to, condescend to the undignified and unprincipled methods which ordinary landowners or their agents sometimes employ. It must be remembered that if the Government is at a disadvantage in this respect, in other respects the Government have advantages which the private Zemindar does not possess. For instance, it is not a very easy thing to prescribe against the Government. In order to make a good title to land against the Government by prescription it is necessary that adverse possession of the land should be held for a period of 60 years.

If it is not established affirmatively that the land on which the alleged riot took place (the land in plot W) was in the actual possession of the Government, the charge as alleged is not proved and the petitioners are not guilty of rioting with the common object stated in the charge. It is to that question that the Rule was directed and it is to that question that we confined the arguments before us. In the view we take the petitioners are entitled to an acquittal on the charge as framed. The amount of actual force and violence used by the petitioners appear not to have been great. In the circumstances, therefore, we have not thought it necessary to consider whether any offence other than the offence stated in the charge was committed by them.

The result is that the Rule is made absolute and the conviction of the petitioners and the sentences passed upon them are set aside. The fines or so much of them as may have been paid must be refunded.

The petitioners will be discharged from their bail bonds.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree.

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 104—Return of allotment of shares, failure to furnish—Ignorance of provision of law, whether excuse.

Under section 104 (1) (a) of the Companies Act, the Directors and Manager of a Company are bound to furnish to the Registrar the return of allotment of shares; and their failure to do so renders them liable to the penalties provided by sub-section (3) of that section. A plea of ignorance of the provisions of the law in this respect cannot be accepted as an excuse for failing to comply therewith. Where, however, the default is not intentional, but is due to negligence alone, the full or a heavy penalty ought not to be exacted. [p. 886, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from the order of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Gurdaspur, dated the 15th January 1919.

Mr. Herbert, Officiating Government Advocate, for the Appellant.

Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Nathu Ram Varma, Managing Director of the Batala Bank, Limited, Munshi Ram Sharma, Manager, and Megh Raj, Pleader, Halas Rai, Merchant, and Rai Sahib Karam Chand, Directors of the said Bank, were proceeded against under section 104 (3) of the Indian Companies Act (VII of 1913) for having failed to comply with the provisions of section 104 (1) (a) of the said Act. Rai Sahib Karam Chand died and the remaining persons were acquitted by the trying Magistrate on the 15th January 1919.

Against this order of acquittal the Local Government has preferred this appeal, and we have heard the learned Government Advocate in support while Mr. Gokal Chand Narang has addressed us on behalf of the four respondents.

The Bank of Batala, Limited, was registered under the Indian Companies Act, 1882, on the 7th May 1913, as a Company having a share capital and the four respondents were the officers of the said Bank.

Its first Balance Sheet was issued for the year ending on the 31st December 1913, and showed that 550 shares had been allotted.

On the 1st April 1914 the present Indian Companies Act, VII of 1913, came into force and by section 104 (1) (a) of this Act it was enacted that:—

Section 104 (1): "Whenever a Company having a share capital makes any allotment of its shares, the Company shall, within one month thereafter,

(a) "file with the Registrar a return of the allotments, stating the number and nominal amount of the shares comprised in the allotment, the names, addresses and descriptions of the allottees, and the amount (if any) paid or due and payable on each share; . . . . . "

A Balance Sheet was issued by the Bank for the half year ending on the 30th June 1914, in which the number of shares that had been allotted was shown as 555. The provisions of section 104 (1) (a) of Act VII of 1913 had, however, not been complied with.

For the year ending on the 30th June 1915 the Bank issued another Balance Sheet in which the number of shares allotted was given as 558. Here again section 104 (1) (a) of Act VII of 1913 has been ignored.

The Registrar, however, took no action in the matter.

Subsequently Balance Sheets were issued for the years ending on the 30th June 1916 and on the 30th June 1917, the number of shares allotted being entered in each case as 558.

In the Balance Sheet that was issued for the year ending on the 30th June 1918, however, the number of shares allotted was shown as 735, an increase of 177 shares within the year under reference.

These 177 shares were allotted as under:—

On the 30th October 1917	...	17
On the 13th January 1918	...	152
On the 19th February 1918	...	8
Total	...	177

but the returns of these allotments were not filed with the Registrar till the 25th October 1918, when they had been requisitioned by that officer. There had thus been a default in complying with the requirements of section 104 (1) (a) of Act VII of 1913,

The case for the Crown was, and is, that by reason of their default the respondents had rendered themselves liable to the penalties imposed by section 104 (3) of Act VII of 1913, which runs as follows:—

"(3) If default is made in complying with the requirements of this section, every officer of the company who is knowingly a party to the default shall be liable to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees for every day during which the default continues."

The respondents while admitting that the provisions of section 104 (1) (a) of Act VII of 1913 had not been complied with, pleaded (1) that the Directors were not responsible for the default inasmuch as it was not their duty but the duty of the manager to furnish the said returns, and (2) that in any event the default was not an intentional one and was due only to their ignorance of the provisions of the new Act, the former Act of 1882 not having any corresponding provision in it.

The trying Magistrate held, rightly, that the "default and negligence" were "quite patent," but acquitted the respondents, holding that the use of the word "knowingly" in section 104 (3) of the Act excused not only ignorance on matters of fact but ignorance of law as well.

Mr. Herbert for the Crown contended that this view was incorrect and that ignorance of law, could not be pleaded by the respondents as an excuse. He argued that as the respondents must be presumed to know the law, they must be held to have knowingly taken part in the omission to comply with it. He further contended that the Directors and Managers of the Bank were bound to see that the provisions of the law were complied with and were bound, therefore, to see that the necessary returns were submitted. In support of this latter contention he referred to Tota Ram v. Emperor (1) and Tota Ram v. Emperor (2). There can be no doubt that it is the duty of the Directors and the Managers of a Company to furnish the returns that are necessary under section 104 (1) (a) of the present Act. The first contention, therefore, of the respondents is untenable, and they must be held liable unless they are able to show that they are excused by their ignorance of the law. Seeing that the Act had been in force since the 1st April 1914 and further having regard to the fact that one of the respondents is a Pleader, it is obvious that the plea of ignorance of the law cannot be accepted. The respondents must be held to have known that on the allotment of the shares in question the law required a return of the allotment to be forwarded to the Registrar. Doubtless if they or any one of them could show as a matter of fact that they or he were or was not aware of the default and could show circumstances to justify the conclusion that as a matter of fact they or he believed that the returns required had been sent, the penalty could not be exacted. In the present case the only real plea is that they were unaware of the provisions of the law on this subject, and this excuse cannot be accepted [Chhabil Das v. Emperor (3)]. In these circumstances it must be held that the respondents were knowingly parties to the default and have, therefore, rendered themselves liable to the penalties provided by section 104 (3) of Act VII of 1913. At the same time it is not necessary to exact the full or any heavy penalty. The default was not an intentional one but due to negligence alone and had the respondents thought fit to move the proper Court under the proviso to sub-clause 3 of section 104, they might have had the time extended.

We, therefore, think that a fine of Rs. 25 in all payable by each of the respondents will meet the case and accepting this appeal, we convict the respondents under section 104 (3) of Act VII of 1913 and sentence each of them to pay a fine of Rs. 25.

EMPEROR THROUGH SITAL KAHAR—COMPLAINANT—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 97—Person impressed for service against his will—Private defence, right of.

A person is perfectly justified, under section 97 of the Penal Code, in offering resistance to his being taken away against his will with the object of being impressed for service or employment.

Case reported by the Officiating Sessions Judge, Rae Bareli, under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Mr. F. Hasan, for the Accused.

Syed Ali Mohammad, holding brief of the Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The complainant had no right to impress the accused, who is a Kahar, for service or employment. The accused refused to accompany him, when the complainant told him that he was required to work with a certain Government official. When pressed to go for the work mentioned, he started by abusing and followed it up by attacking the complainant with a shoe. The complainant does not say that he used any force; but there can be no doubt that he tried to send the accused with the Tahsil peons who had come to him, whether he was willing to go or not, and the accused was justified under section 97 of the Indian Penal Code in offering resistance to his being taken away against his will. The accused was not deprived of the right of defence by reason of the fact that the complainant was acting in pursuance of a direction given by the Tahsildar that a Kahar should be supplied.

As pointed out in Bisu Halder v. Emperor (1), the exceptions referred to in section 99 of the Indian Penal Code apply to cases where a thing is done which is not strictly justifiable or, in other words, where the official has done wrongly what he may have done rightly, but not to cases where the act could not possibly have been done lawfully or where the act was done without jurisdiction. In Emperor v. Bahal (2), where a vaccinator attempted to vaccinate a child against the wishes of his father and the father and some of his relations intervened and assaulted the vaccinator, it was held that they were perfectly justified in interfering with what the vaccinator was doing and preventing him from vaccinating the child against their wishes. In Queen-Empress v. Jogendra Nath Mukerjee (3) a similar view was taken under somewhat different circumstances. Section 323 of the Indian Penal Code cannot, therefore, be applied to the present case.

It has been suggested that section 160 of the Code might be applied, but it does not appear where the quarrel took place and no charge under that section was framed.

The accused will be acquitted of the offence charged and the sentence passed on him will be set aside. The fine, if realized, will be refunded.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 110—Proceeding under s. 110—Previous acquittal—Magistrate, whether can question legality of acquittal.

Where an accused person is being tried by a Magistrate under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code and it is found that in a previous case of dacoity he was acquitted by the Court of Session, it is not for the Magistrate to question in his judgment the decision of the Sessions Judge. MAHADEI v. RAM SAHAI.

Criminal revision from an order of the District Magistrate, Fatehpur, dated the 5th June 1919.

Mr. A. P. Dube, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Badlu applies in revision seeking to have an order passed against him under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure set aside. This order was passed by a Magistrate of the First Class on the 13th May 1919 and was upheld in appeal by the District Magistrate of Fatehpur on the 5th June 1919. Ordinarily, I would not interfere in revision with findings of fact but this case presents some peculiar features. It is argued on behalf of the petitioner that he has been greatly prejudiced by the Court of first instance having been influenced adversely to the petitioner by a judgment of the Additional Sessions Judge of Cawnpore acquitting him (the petitioner) in a dacoity case on the 29th September 1918. That the petitioner's view in this respect is correct would appear from the following paragraph from the first Court's judgment:—"It would be better to say something regarding the dacoity which occurred at Chak Jahanpur, Police Circle Budki, on the 31st May 1918. The dacoits carried away property to the value of Rs. 750, a part of the property was recovered from the possession of three of the accused and one of them, Bansi Singh, was made King's witness. The case resulted in an acquittal on the 29th September 1918 from the Court of the Additional Sessions Judge of Cawnpore, Khan Bahadar Muhammad Husain Sahib. The evidence on the record appears to be free from bias and mostly consisted of disinterested persons who had no motive to fabricate a false case, but the learned Judge came to the conclusion that no dacoity actually occurred and that the case for the prosecution was the result of a conspiracy. An appeal against the order of acquittal of the learned Judge could not be preferred on behalf of the Government, as the period of three months laid down by the Government of India for appeals against acquittals had expired." The Magistrate was not justified in importing this sentence into his judgment. It was not for him to question in his judgment the decision of the Court of Session which had come to the conclusion that the case then brought against the petitioner was false and the result of a conspiracy. His remarks that the appeal could not be brought by the Local Government within the time prescribed by law are futile. If the district authorities had moved in time and the Government had desired to file an appeal, they would have found no difficulty in carrying out their intention. I have gone through the evidence on the record, and I find that several of the witnesses against him in this case were witnesses against him in the Sessions case, in which their evidence was disregarded by the Sessions Judge. This has led me to go through the further evidence against the applicant on the record which, in my opinion, is clearly insufficient to establish the case against him, a great deal of it consisting of inadmissible evidence. The first Court said in its judgment that it cannot act on the evidence of the Sub Inspector. The reasons he has given for not doing so are sound. In my opinion the evidence on the record does not justify the orders passed by the Courts below. For the above reasons this revision must be allowed and the orders of the Court below directing the applicant to enter into a personal bond and to give sureties must be set aside. I am informed by the learned Counsel for the applicant that the applicant is in custody. He must be released forthwith.

Revision allowed.

CHAGAN RAJ v. HERA LAL.

The Police enquiry contemplated by section 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot take the place of such evidence as the complainant may desire to produce before an adjudication is made of his or her complaint. Such an enquiry can be ordered before evidence is recorded to enable the Magistrate to determine how far the complaint was prima facie well-founded. When the Magistrate decides to record the evidence himself, he should complete the enquiry and determine upon the evidence adduced how far the complaint is borne out.

Where a person accused of a criminal offence is a member of the Police force, it is desirable that the inquiry should be conducted by the Magistrate himself.

Revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Lucknow, dated the 21st March 1919, confirming that of the City Magistrate, Lucknow, dated the 12th February 1919.

Mr. R. F. Bahadurji, for the Applicant.

Pandit Harkaran Nath Misra, for the Opposite Party.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The complainant charged Ram Sahai, a Police constable, and Fakire, a goldsmith, with having embezzled her jewellery. Her allegation was that she had entrusted her jewellery to them when she took her husband, who was unwell, to the house of a relation at another place, so that she might receive from him such assistance as might be necessary. The Magistrate, after examining the complainant, ordered the Police to make an enquiry. The Police sent up a report which was inconclusive, because the complainant had refused to produce her witnesses before the Police. The Magistrate then examined some of the witnesses produced by the complainant. Their evidence was recorded in the vernacular but no English memorandum appears to have been kept. The Magistrate subsequently directed another Police Officer to make an enquiry. The report of that officer was that there was some truth in the allegation made by the complainant but the evidence produced by her was insufficient. The learned Magistrate thereupon rejected the complaint.

The Police enquiry contemplated by section 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot take the place of such evidence as the complainant may desire to produce before an adjudication is made of his or her complaint. Such an enquiry can be ordered before evidence is recorded to enable the Magistrate to determine how far the complaint was prima facie well-founded. When the Magistrate decides to record the evidence himself, he should complete the enquiry and determine upon the evidence adduced how far the complaint is borne out.

In Queen-Empress v. Kanappa Pillai (1) it was pointed out that where the accused is a member of the Police force, it is generally better that the enquiry should be conducted by the Magistrate himself. Here one of the accused is a Police constable. The complainant states that she has not been given an opportunity to produce all her witnesses. The report of the Police is not altogether against her and a further enquiry seems desirable.

The application is, therefore, allowed and the case sent back to the Court by which it was originally tried for further enquiry and disposal in the manner required by law.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 100, applicability of—Order for removal of child from custody of accused if no steps are taken to move higher Court for getting rid of order, propriety of.

On a complaint made to the effect that the adopted son of the complainant's daughter-in-law living with her was removed from her house by his natural father without her consent and was not brought back, the accused produced the boy in Court before any search warrant was issued and admitted having made a contract for giving the boy in adoption but denied any actual ceremony of adoption. Thereafter, when the complainant filed a written statement and produced the original contract, the Magistrate adjourned the case to a certain date and ordered that "if the High Court be not moved by that date he would order the boy to be made over to the complainant:"

Held, (1) that the order directing the child to be made over to the complainant but temporarily kept in abeyance, was improper and should be set aside;

(2) that in a matter like this the health or safety of the child was the paramount consideration;

(3) that it was doubtful whether section 100 of the Criminal Procedure Code applied to a case like this.

Mr. Langford James, Babus Tarak Nath Sadhu and Bibhuti Bhusan Saha, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—The facts of the case are shortly these. On the 5th of March 1919 a complaint was lodged on behalf of one Bibau Bibi also known as Gulabo Bibi (who to avoid confusion would hereafter be referred to by her last mentioned name) to the effect that Bibba Bibi, the widow of her deceased son Lala Kapurchand, had adopted a boy Basant Roy aged about 5 years in the beginning of February last, that the accused, who as the natural father of the boy had given him in adoption by a registered deed, came to live in the house of the complainant with his wife and subsequently removed the child from her house without her consent and did not bring him back. As soon as the complaint was filed, the accused produced the boy in Court and on the 21st of March filed a written statement in which he admitted having entered into a contract for giving his son in adoption, but denied that any actual ceremony of adoption had taken place. He also alleged misrepresentation and various other grounds as invalidating the contract. The complainant then filed a written statement traversing the statements made by the accused and also produced the original contract. The case was then adjourned to 7th of April and on that date the Magistrate passed the following order:—

"Adjourned to 22nd for defendant to move the High Court. If in the meantime no steps are taken, I shall order the boy to be made over to complainant on 22nd."

The present Rule obtained by the accused relates to this last order.

It is argued that there is no provision of the law upon which this order can be supported. In reply the learned Counsel for the complainant has relied on section 100 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In the present case although a warrant for production of the boy was ordered, no search warrant was issued nor was the boy brought before the Court in execution of such a warrant. No evidence has yet been recorded. Upon the materials in the record it is not clear that the confinement, if any, amounted to an offence. Under these circumstances it appears to be very doubtful if section 100, Criminal Procedure Code, applied to this case. Be that as it may, it seems to me that there is no danger to the health or safety of the child in his being allowed to live with his natural parents and this must always be the paramount consideration in matters of this kind. According to the complainants' own case it does not appear that the boy has ever lived with his adoptive mother or with Gulabo Bibi apart from his natural parents, and it is likely that he will be at least equally happy with them.

I, therefore, think that under all the circumstances of this case the order of the Magistrate, dated the 7th April 1919, which in effect is an order directing the child to be made over to the complainant but temporarily kept in abeyance, is not a proper order and I accordingly set it aside.

As the evidence in the case has not been gone into, I do not think it right to quash the proceedings but at the same time I may express the hope that the parties will see the wisdom of settling their differences amicably or of seeking their remedy in the Civil Court.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

A firm having its head office at Karachi made a complaint to the City Magistrate at Karachi against workmen who had received an advance for work to be done at Hala in the Hyderabad District. The City Magistrate returned the complaint for presentation to the proper Court. In an application for revision to the Judicial Commissioner it was contended that the Magistrate was wrong in returning the complaint:

Held, that the City Magistrate was right in refusing to entertain the complaint, that the complaint should have been presented to the nearest Magistrate empowered, in the local area in which the alleged offence occurred, to entertain the complaint and that that Magistrate was the First Class Magistrate at Hala and not the City Magistrate at Karachi. [p. 892, col. 1.]

Application for revision against the order of the Additional City Magistrate, Karachi.

Mr. Suganlal Hassanand, for the Applicant.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

PRATT, J. C.—This is an application for revision of an order made by the Additional City Magistrate, Karachi, under section 201, Criminal Procedure Code, returning the applicant's complaint for presentation to the proper Court.

The applicant, who is the manager of a firm of forest contractors whose head office is in Karachi, made a complaint under Act XIII of 1859 against workmen who had received at the Noorketti forest in the Hala Taluka of the Hyderabad District an advance for work to be done in that forest.

The applicant contends that the Magistrate was wrong in refusing to entertain the complaint.

Act XIII of 1859 has been extended to Sind and by Notification No. 379 of the 25th January 1905 the Local Government was "pleased to specially appoint all Magistrates of the First Class to exercise the powers vested by the said Act in a Magistrate of Police:" Bombay Local Rules and Orders, Volume I, Part II, page 39. Under this Notification any Magistrate of the First Class in Sind could entertain the complaint of any resident in Sind.

But then followed another notification under section 5—Notification No. 655 of the 7th September 1917 which directed that the powers "conferred on all Magistrates" shall be exercised only in cases in which the advance of money was made or the work was to be performed within the local limits of their ordinary jurisdiction: Sind Official Gazette, 13th September 1917, Part I, page 1133.

Under this Notification the magisterial business under the Act is distributed among the Magistrates empowered. The distribution is territorial according to the Magistrate's local jurisdiction and the cases are classified according to the place of payment of advance or of breach of contract.

It is under this Notification that the City Magistrate, Karachi, declined to receive the complaint and Mr. Suganlal contends that the Notification is ultra vires.

Section 5 confers a power to appoint several officers to exercise powers in a local area, and there can be no doubt that this implies a power to distribute the business in that area between these officers. This is an application of the principle that when an Act confers a power, it impliedly confers all the powers reasonably necessary for its execution: Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XXVII, Article 280; Maxwell (2nd Edition), page 433, and Shankar Ramlal Dikshit v. Martandrao Bhau Tipnis (1).

Mr. Suganlal admits the implied power of distribution, but contends that the cases should be classified according to the residence of the complainant. But that is clearly a matter within the discretion of the distributory authority.

Mr. Suganlal refers to section 181 of the Criminal Procedure Code and contends that as the offence of theft is triable by a Magistrate not only where the theft is committed but also where the stolen property was retained in the local limits of his jurisdiction, the Magistrates' powers cannot be limited to the trial of theft in the one case and not in the other. But the fallacy of this argument lies in the assumption that the Notification of 1917 deprives the Magistrates of any of the powers with which they were invested by the Notification of 1905. The Notification does not take away any of the powers, it merely forbids the exercise of the powers in a class of cases with a view to a distribution of the business. So in the case of offence of theft the Magistrate might be directed to try only cases in which the theft was committed within the local limits of his jurisdiction. Such an order could be made by the District Magistrate under section 17 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, with a view to the distribution of magisterial business.

It is true that the residence in the local area gives the right of recourse to a Magistrate in that area. But the local area is not Karachi but Sind. This right is not taken away, for the complainant still has a right of recourse to a Magistrate in Sind. He would naturally go, as pointed out in Ali Mohamed v. Emperor (2), to the nearest Magistrate empowered in that area. But that nearest Magistrate must be a Magistrate authorised to entertain the complaint. In the present case that Magistrate is not the Additional City Magistrate, Karachi, but a Magistrate, First Class, at Hala.

The Notification is intra vires and the City Magistrate, Karachi, was right in refusing to entertain the complaint. I would reject the application.

(2) 35 Ind. Cas. 484; 10 S. L. R. 56; 17 Cr. L. J. 303.

FAWCETT, A. J. C.—I concur. Mr. Suganlal's main contention is that (1) the effect of extending the Act to Sind and appointing all First Class Magistrates in Sind to exercise the powers vested by the Act in a Magistrate of Police (as was done in 1905) is to empower each of such Magistrates with jurisdiction not only in the cases referred to in the Commissioner's Notification of 1917 but also in cases where the employer resides or carries on business within the local limits of the Magistrate's ordinary jurisdiction, irrespective of where the money was advanced to the labourer or where the work was to be performed, and (2) such powers once conferred could not in the absence of statutory authority be limited in the manner effected by the Commissioner's Notification; at the most they could only be entirely withdrawn.

The first point is in accordance with this Court's ruling in Ali Mahomed v. Emperor (2), but no authority was cited for the second statement and in my opinion it is incorrect. It is not a case of a grant of property but of jurisdiction, which is derived from the Sovereign as the source and fountain of justice (Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume VI, Article 605 at page 399); and where judicial functions have been delegated to any person, they can (subject, of course, to any statutory provisions to the contrary) be resumed by Government in exercise of its Sovereign powers. Bir Bikram Deo v. Secretary of State for India (3). And if there is such a right of resumption, it follows that there is a right of putting limitations on the exercise of the judicial powers conferred, for the principle that the greater contains the less applies, Broom's Legal Maxims, 7th Edition, page 139.

I do not think there is anything in the Act to the contrary. Mr. Suganlal argued that, when the Act was extended under section 5, the result is necessarily the same as that provided for in section 1. But this is not so. In the first place, as pointed out by the learned Judicial Commissioner, the area of extension is Sind, and, therefore, section 1 has to be read as if Sind and not any particular town or place in Sind were substituted for the words "Presidency Town." And secondly, any extension of the Act is subject to the limitation that the Magistrates exercising powers under the Act shall be specially appointed by Government. This gives an unrestricted discretion to Government as to the appointment of particular Magistrates and there is nothing rendering it obligatory on them to appoint Magistrates, having local jurisdiction and sitting in a place to which the Act may be extended. Thus this Act might be extended to the towns of Karachi and Hyderabad, and the Magistrates appointed by Government might all be Magistrates whose jurisdiction (apart from this appointment) is confined to the Hyderabad District. Similarly the Act might be extended to the towns of Sukkur and Shikarpur and only one Magistrate might be appointed to exercise the powers of a Magistrate of Police under the Act, viz., one holding his Court and having jurisdiction only at Sukkur. There is, therefore, no right conferred on an employer residing or carrying on business at a town to which the Act has been extended, to insist that there shall be a Magistrate sitting at and exercising jurisdiction in that town; and even if such a Magistrate is appointed to exercise the powers of a Magistrate of Police under the Act, it is (on the general principles already mentioned) open to Government to restrict the exercise of them in the manner effected by the Notification complained of. Not only is this legitimate in the exercise of the power of Government to control the distribution of magisterial business (which is recognised and provided for in the Criminal Procedure Code), but it is also, in my opinion, covered by the terms of section 5 of this Act. The Notification of 1917 might have been framed to say that the powers in question "shall be exercised by any Magistrate of the First Class having jurisdiction under section 12 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in the place where the advance of money was made or the work was to be performed," and this would clearly be an appointment of a specified class of officers under section 5. The Notification of 1917 says exactly the same thing, only in another way.

I agree, therefore, that the application should be rejected.

Application rejected.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 1, 488, 489—Malabar Law—Maintenance—Issue of sambandam marriage, right of, to order under s. 488—'Unable to maintain itself,' meaning of—Change of circumstances, what is—"Special law" in s. 1, meaning of.

The offspring of a Malabar sambandam marriage are not entitled to an order for maintenance under section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, where the tavazhi or tarwad to which their mother is attached has sufficient funds to maintain them. [p. 894, col. 1.]

Chantan v. Chakkapayyan Mathu, 32 Ind. Cas. 144; 39 M. 957; 19 M. L. T. 23; (1916) 1 M. W. N. 111; 17 Cr. L. J. 16, followed.

(Case-law reviewed.)

Per Napier, J.—The words 'unable to maintain itself' in section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code cannot be confined to the tender age of the child but must also have reference to its financial dependency. [p. 895, col. 1.]

Where the amount available from the tavazhi or tarwad funds becomes insufficient to maintain the children, that would be a change of circumstances within the meaning of section 489 of the Code. [p. 896, col. 2.]

The expression 'special law' in section 1, Criminal Procedure Code, has reference to statutory enactments and not to local family law. [p. 894, col. 1.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Malapuram, in Miscellaneous Case No. 28 of 1918.

ORDER.

AYLING, J.—Petitioner and respondent in this case are both Nairs following Marumakatayam Law, and the four children in respect of whom petitioner claims maintenance are the offspring of a Sambandam between them. The Sub Divisional Magistrate, finding that petitioner's Tavazhi, from which the children admittedly had a right to maintenance, was able to maintain them, has dismissed the petition relying on the ruling in Chantan v Chakkapayyan Mathu (1).

I was a party to that decision and I after hearing the matter re-argued I see no reason to change my mind.

It seems to me that the object of including the maintenance sections (Chapter XXXVI) in the Criminal Procedure Code can only have been the prevention of destitution on public grounds; and that it should only be applied in cases where, in the absence of these provisions or the more cumbrous process of civil law, the wife or children would be destitute. Its unrestricted application to a society governed by a system of law like the Marumakatayam system is open to the peculiar objection and danger that it runs counter to the central ideas underlying the matriarchal system and should, in my opinion, only be allowed to the extent absolutely necessary to secure the object at which it is aimed.

I would, therefore, dismiss the petition.

NAPIER, J.—This petition arises out of an order passed by the Sub Divisional Magistrate of South Malabar, dismissing a petition by a certain Nair lady asking for an order for maintenance for her children against the respondent. The findings are that the petitioner is a Nair and has been observing the Marumakatayam system, that she began Sambandam with the respondent in 1908 09 and between the years 1908 to 1917 four children were born, all of whom were to the respondent. The respondent denied the paternity, but the Magistrate has found it and I certainly accept that finding. The petitioner belongs to a Tavazhi consisting of her mother, herself and her family and one Achutan Nair. The lower Court has not found what the income of the Tavazhi is, nor has it given any finding as to the income of the Tarwad. All it finds is that the Tavazhi lands are of some value and able to maintain the children, though not well. On this finding the Magistrate applies a decision of this Court in Chantan v. Chakkapayyan Mathu (1) and holds that no order can be made. Chantan v. Chakkapayyan Mathu (1) entirely holds that the words "unable to maintain itself" mean "not having a right to be maintained." It is argued before us that this decision is wrong as being in conflict with other decisions of this Court, and it is pointed out that in the last reported case no one appeared for the petitioner. The question has now been fully re-argued before us and we have examined those cases.

The first contention argued is that the section does not apply to persons following Marumakatayam Law, as that is a special law within the meaning of section 1 of the Criminal Procedure Code. This view has been directly negatived in Ayya Patter v. Kaliani Ammal (2), Kariyadan Pokkar v. Kayat Beeran Kutti (3) and Venkatakrishna Patter v. Chimmukutti (4) and I have no doubt that those words in section 1 have reference to statutory enactments and not to local family law.

I have, therefore, to consider whether apart from section 1, Chapter XXXVI is applicable. In my opinion we must read the section in such a manner as to be properly applicable to the various social conditions of this country. The section is certainly old, as it is to be found in the Act of 1861. But we have to bear in mind its origin. In so far as illegitimate children are concerned, it owes its origin to the old English Act, 7 and 8 Vic. C. 101, which gave a right to a woman either before or after the birth of her illegitimate child to apply for an order against the father, and it has been held that the origin of this law is the prevention of vagrancy.

Bearing this in mind I think that we should give a meaning to the words 'unable to maintain itself' which is in keeping with the legal position of the parties who are affected. There is no doubt as to the position of the children of a Sambandam in Malabar. That system of law is matriarchal and the children are entitled to be maintained by their Tavazhi or Tarwad. Whatever other rights they have, there can be no doubt that in this respect the Marumakatayam system differs completely from the Hindu Law in the rest of the Presidency, the Muhammadan Law and the English Law. I am, therefore, strongly inclined to think that the words "unable to maintain itself" cannot be confined, as suggested, to the tender age of the child but must also have reference to its financial dependency. This view seems to me to gain support from other words in the section. The first are the words almost directly after those words "a monthly allowance for the maintenance." That clearly points to the object of the payment which is to be ordered, and it seems to me that if the payment is not required for maintenance, it necessarily follows that the payment should not be ordered. Then there are the words in section 489 'change in the circumstances.' If the words "child unable to maintain itself" had reference only to the tender age of the child, it seems to me that so wide a word as 'circumstances' would not have been used in this latter section. If it is only a question of age a child cannot grow younger, it can only grow older, and that change can hardly be called a change of circumstances. The word is very applicable if a wider scope is intended. If, for instance, in this case the Tavazhi lost all its money and there was nothing left for the child for maintenance, that would undoubtedly be a change of circumstances. In the same way, if an order had originally been made in consequence of the poverty of the Tavazhi and it was brought to the notice of the Court that the Tavazhi had become possessed of wealth, that would be a change of circumstances.

So far for the words of the section.

Now for the cases.

The first is one of 1893 reported as Ayya Katter v. Paliani Ammal (2). That was also a case of Sambandam between a Nair woman and a Brahmin. The Magistrate found that the Tarwad was too poor to take the responsibility off the shoulders of the respondent, but he also held that the words in question had only reference to age. The revision petition was heard by Collins, C. J., and Shephard, J. The judgment, however, is very short. The Bench negatives the suggestion that the law enacted by the Code does not apply to Malabar and says that on the facts found there is no doubt that the order is right. The next case is Kariyadan Pokkar v. Kayat Beeran Kutti (3). The parties were Moplahs, but the Magistrate did not find whether they followed the Muhammadan or the Marumakatayam Law. The Magistrate found that the defendant was willing to maintain the mother and the child if they lived with him, and on that finding held that no order could be made. The petition was heard by Collins, C. J., and Parker, J., and it appears that the complainant was the Karnavan of the mother's Tarwad and was acting as de facto guardian of the children. The Bench negatived the proposition that section 488 did not apply to Malabar and held that section 1 was not a bar to the petition. The learned Judges then formulated two questions: (1) Are the children legitimate or illegitimate children of the defendant; and (2) has he neglected or refused to maintain them. They decided nothing but raised the following question: "If the parties follow Marumakatayam Law, the question will arise whether the father could be held to have neglected his duty to provide for his children if they were being actually maintained by the Karnavan of their mother's Tarwad who is bound by law to maintain them." It seems to me that the Bench rather assumed that the words "unable to maintain itself" were not confined to the question of the tender age of the child. The next case is Venkatakrishna Patter v. Chimmukutti (4). That was also a case of Sambandam between persons governed by the Marumakatayam Law. The Magistrate held that the petitioner, the mother, had no means of maintenance for her child and made an order against the father for Rs. 5 a month. The revision petition was heard by Collins, C. J., and Benson, J., and the judgment is as short as in Ayya Patter's case (2), which was expressly followed without any reference to Kariyadan Pokkar v. Kayat Beeran Kutti (3). "We have no doubt but that the Magistrate believed the woman and found that the petitioner before the High Court was the father of the child. He is, therefore, liable" I certainly find it impossible to reconcile the wide language of this judgment with the doubts expressed in Kariyadan Pokkar v. Kayat Beeran Kutti (3) and I have little doubt that the learned Chief Justice took a strong view of the matter and that Parker, J., who sat with Collins, C. J., in the case reported as Kariyadan Pokkar v. Kayat Beeran Kutti (3) did not agree with him. The next case is In re Parathy Valappil Moideen (5). In that case the parties were Moplahs governed by Marumakatayam Law. The petitioner had been divorced and was living in her own Tarwad house with her children, and it was assumed that they were being maintained. It was also found that the father was willing to take the boy and maintain him. The father petitioned this Court and the case was heard by Sadasiva Aiyar, J. He directly held that the inability referred to in the section relates to the absence of sufficient maturity of physical and mental development in the child rendering it in consequence unable to earn its living by its own efforts, and does not refer to inability through poverty or absence of means. That this is the considered view of our learned brother has been demonstrated to us by the quotation of a decision of his as Chief Justice of the Travancore State which we have carefully considered. The last case is that reported as Chantan v. Chakkapayyan Mathu (1). There it was found that the children were in fact maintained by the Tavazhi, but the Magistrate made the order. The petitioner applied to the High Court and his case was argued by a Vakil, no one appearing for the mother. Abdur Rahim, J., in his judgment refers to the judgment of Sadasiva Aiyar, J., and says that he was unable to accept the narrow meaning of the words "unable to maintain itself" and holds that where the child is in fact maintained by some other person as of right, the section does not apply. The learned Judge also points out that the procedure is summary and does not cover the same ground as the civil liability of a father to maintain his child, and is of opinion that the Legislature did not contemplate a summary order of this sort in a case where a child is well-to-do. He points out that in the case of Kariyadan Pokkar v. Kayat Beeran Kutti (3) the Bench did seem to suggest that children who were actually being maintained by their mother's Tarwad were not entitled to maintenance. My learned brother concurred in this view.

On an examination of these cases there is no doubt that there is a difference of opinion Collins, C. J., seems to have taken a very strong view in two cases, but he was a party to Kariyadan Pokkar v. Kayat Beeran Kutti (3) where the opposite view was suggested. The decision of my learned brother Sadasiva Aiyar, J., is entitled to great respect, but it is the decision of a single Judge; whereas the decision in Kariyadan Pokkar v. Kayat Beeran Kutti (3) is that of a Bench If I thought the latter decision was wrong, I should have asked my learned brother to agree to its being referred to a Full Bench. But as on the policy of the provision and on the language of section 1, I concur with the latter ruling, I would follow it and dismiss the petition.

I would, however, point out that if the mother of the child can at any time show that the amount available from the Tavazhi or possibly from the Tarwad funds is insufficient to maintain the child, it is open to her to renew her application.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Appeal filed beyond limitation—Time spent in prosecuting remedy in wrong Court, exclusion of—Wrong advice Sufficient cause.

Where, acting upon mistaken advice as to the law, an appeal is presented to the wrong Court, and, when re-presented to the proper Court, the period of limitation has expired, the period during which the appeal was pending in the Court to which it was originally presented may be deducted from the period prescribed for appealing [p. 899, col. 1.]

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the Bombay High Court (Sir Basil Scott, C. J., and Heaton, J.), dated the 1st August 1913, and reported as 23 Ind. Cas. 221, reversing a decree of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Belgaum, dated the 16th April 1910.

FACTS.—One Linga Jayappa of Navalgund was the last of a series of Desais or Revenue Collectors created by the Bijapur Kings. Many grants of lands had been made to the holders of the office in the defendants' family, but after the advent of British rule, their services were no longer necessary, but the British Government recognised the grants and made settlements in respect thereof. A Government Resolution of 1862 sanctioned the recognition of this Navalgund's "Desai" as a personal holding, the offer of a settlement was made and accepted on a certain quit-rent, which was further validated by section 12 of the Bombay Act II of 1863. The above last Desai, by a Will and codicil, disposed of all the Vatan property to the defendants and died. It was also recited in the Will that he did not authorise his wife to adopt. The respondents applied for Probate in the District Court, and were granted the same. The present suit was by the wife of the deceased Linga Jayappa and her adopted son for declaration of the invalidity of the Will, of the validity of the adoption and for an injunction.

Messrs. De Gruyther, K. C., and E B. Raikes, for the Appellants.—The appeal ought to have been filed in the District Court and the High Court rightly held so. See Suits Valuation Act, section 8, Court Fees Act, section 7, clause 4 (c), Bombay Civil Court Act XIV of 1870, section 7, clause 4 (c) (2). See also Vachhani Keshabhai v. Vachhani Nanbha (1), Hari Sankar Dutt v. Kali Kumar Patra (2). Time for appeal to the District Court had expired when appeal was filed therein under Article 152. The District Court did not excuse the delay. The High Court had no power to excuse the delay. There was not sufficient cause for excusing delay under section 5. Brij Indar Singh v. Kanshi Ram (3) does not apply, as appeal to the District Court was out of time when appeal was presented to the High Court. The Vatan lands were inalienable by law and custom: See Bombay Regulation Act XVI of 1827, section 20, and Bombay Act II of 1863, section 12 (1).

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown, for the Respondents, were not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

SIR JOHN EDGE.—This is an appeal from a decree, dated August 1, 1913*, of the High Court at Bombay, which varied a decree, dated April 16, 1910, of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Belgaum.

The suit in which this appeal has arisen was brought on February 22, 1909, in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Belgaum by the plaintiffs, who are appellants here. They allege that the property in suit was inalienable; that Lingappa Jayappa, who had purported to dispose of that property by his Will of June 6, 1906, and a codicil of August 13, 1906, had no power to alienate the property; and that the plaintiff, Jayappa Lingappa, was the validly adopted son of Lingappa Jayappa; and they claimed a declaration that Lingappa Jayapoa deceased had no power to make a Will dated June 6, 1906, and a codicil dated August 13, 1906, and that no right accrued to the defendants under the Will and codicil; a declaration that the plaintiff, Jayappa Lingappa, was the adopted son of Lingappa Jayappa deceased; and a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from recovering the properties in suit from the plaintiffs. The claim for the injunction was valued in the plaint at Rs. 5.

In the written statement, it was alleged that the claim of the plaintiffs was groundless; that Lingappa Jayappa had full power to dispose of the property in suit, and did so dispose of it by his Will and codicil; and that the alleged adoption was not authorized and was invalid.

The widow of Lingappa Jayappa, professing to act under an authority which she alleged had been given to her by the testator in his lifetime, adopted Jayappa Lingappa as a son to her deceased husband on December 10, 1906.

Lingappa Jayappa, hereafter referred to as the testator, died on August 23, 1906, and the Court of Wards took charge of the property in dispute in this suit. In June 1907, the Collector of Belgaum, ex officio an executor of the Will, applied to the Court of the District Judge of Belgaum for a grant of Probate of the Will and the codicil. That application was opposed, but the Court of the District Judge granted Probate of the Will and codicil, and that grant was upheld on appeal.

The First Class Subordinate Judge of Belgaum tried the suit. He, having found that the property in suit was inalienable, that the testator had no power to alienate it and that the plaintiff Jayappa Lingappa had been validly adopted, by his decree of April 16, 1910, made the declarations and granted the injunction claimed in the plaint. From that decree the defendants appealed to the High Court at Bombay. For the necessary purposes of that appeal they applied for copies of the judgment of the trial Judge, but did not obtain them until June 11, 1910. They presented their appeal to the High Court on July 19, 1910, which, if the appeal lay to the High Court, was well within the ninety days allowed for an appeal to the High Court. On objection taken on behalf of the defendants, the High Court on March 11, 1912, rightly decided that the appeal lay to the Court of the District Judge of Belgaum and not to the High Court, and affirmed a principle, which had been previously applied by the High Court at Bombay, that "where a plaintiff sues for a declaratory decree and asks for consequential relief, and puts his own valuation upon that consequential relief, then for the purposes of Court-fee, and also for the purposes of jurisdiction, it is the value that the plaintiff puts upon the plaint that determines both."

The High Court directed that the memorandum of appeal should be returned to the defendants for presentation to the District Judge of Belgaum, and the learned Judges intimated in this judgment that the appeal would be removed into the High Court. On March 16, 1912, the defendants presented the memorandum of appeal to the Court of the District Judge, and alleging that the appeal had been presented to the High Court of Bombay under the bona fide belief that the appeal lay to that Court, prayed that it might be admitted. On March 18, 1912, the District Judge made the following order: "The appeal is admitted to the file without prejudice to any objection that may be taken by the respondents as to limitation or otherwise."

The District Judge in making that order does not appear to have decided that the defendants, who were the appellants before him, had sufficient cause within the meaning of section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908 (Act IX of 1908), for not preferring the appeal to his Court within the period of limitation, which by Article 152 of the First Schedule to that Act was thirty days from the date of the decree appealed from.

It so happened that the District Judge to whom the memorandum of appeal was presented for admission had in 1910, as Legal Remembrancer to the Bombay Government, advised that the appeal from the decree of the trial Judge lay to the High Court, and on his advice the appeal had been preferred on July 19, 1910, to the High Court. The District Judge, knowing that the appeal would probably be removed into the High Court, may reasonably have preferred that the High Court should decide the question under section 5 of the Act.

It appears to their Lordships that when a memorandum of appeal is presented beyond the prescribed period of limitation, the proper order which a Judge should endorse upon it would be to the following effect: "Presented for admission on the (date when the memorandum of appeal was handed in to the office of his Court). Let notice go to the respondents (date of the order)." The Board in Krishnasami Panikondar v. Ramasami Chettiar (4) impressed on the Courts in India the urgent expediency of adopting a procedure which should secure at the stage of admission the final determination (after due notice to all parties) of any question of limitation affecting the competence of the appeal.

After the District Judge had admitted the appeal, it was by order of the High Court removed into that Court. The learned Judges of the High Court, after hearing the parties and considering the affidavits which were filed, were rightly satisfied that the defendants had sufficient cause for not having preferred their appeal to the Court of the District Judge within the period of limitation. The fact that the defendants had acted on mistaken advice as to the law in appealing to the High Court in 1910, did not preclude them from showing that it was owing to their reliance on that advice that they had not presented the appeal to the Court of the District Judge within the prescribed period of limitation. [See Brij Indar Singh v. Kanshi Ram (3).]

The High Court, after a very full and careful consideration of the history of the title to the property in suit, of the Government Resolution of February 6, 1802, of the Bombay Act II of 1863, and of the proceedings which were affirmed or authorized by that Act and of the Will and codicil in question, came to the conclusion that some of the properties claimed by the plaintiffs in this suit were alienable and the private property of the testator and dismissed the suit as to them, and as to other of the properties claimed by the plaintiffs came to the conclusion that they were inalienable, and as to them did not interfere with the decree of the trial Judge. The High Court rightly found that the widow of the testator had no authority to adopt a son to her deceased husband, and consequently the suit, so far as it claimed a declaration that Jayappa Lingappa was an adopted son of the testator, must be treated as dismissed. The High Court made an order of remand as to some of the property in question in the suit. The return to that order of remand was accepted as correct, and the High Court, on December 11, 1914, made the necessary order upon it.

Their Lordships agree with the conclusions of the High Court and with their reasons for those conclusions, and will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed. The appellants must pay the costs of this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Where, in a suit for partnership accounts, a preliminary decree is passed, the fact that an appeal has been preferred from that decree does not operate as a stay of proceedings under that decree, except so far as the Appellate Court may order, nor does such an appeal necessarily oust the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain an application to have a compromise between the parties recorded under Order XXIII, rule 3 of the Civil Procedure Code, and a decree passed in accordance therewith. JUDGMENT.

FAWCETT, J. C.—This appeal arises out of a suit for settlement of partnership accounts, to which the appellant and respondents are parties. In that suit a preliminary decree had been passed by the First Class Subordinate Judge, and the present appellant filed an appeal to this Court against that decree. Subsequently, after a Commissioner had been appointed under the terms of the decree, it is alleged that the appellant Chellaram and plaintiffs-respondents Nos. 1 to 3 came to a compromise, which disposed of the dispute between them. The appellant asked the First Class Subordinate Judge to have the compromise recorded under Order XXIII, rule 3, and a decree passed in accordance therewith, but the First Class Subordinate Judge has rejected this application on the ground that the suit now being merged in the appeal against the preliminary decree, the application should be presented to this Court.

The point before us is, therefore, whether the lower Court erred in holding that it had no jurisdiction under Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code. That rule provides that "Where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted", etc, "the Court shall order such agreement", etc., to be recorded. It, therefore, clearly contemplates that there is a suit pending before the Court in which the application to record a compromise of that suit is made. In the present case, it is admitted by respondents' Pleader that the partnership suit, in which this application is made, is still pending in the lower Court; and the only question is whether the fact of there having been an appeal to this Court from the preliminary decree prevents the lower Court from acting under Order XXIII, rule 3. The duty of passing a final decree in the suit still rests, under section 97 of the Code, on the lower Court, and under Order XLI, rule 5, the fact that an appeal has been made from the preliminary decree does not operate as a stay of proceedings under that decree, except so far as the Appellate Court may order. No order had been made for the stay of proceedings, when the application to record the compromise was before the lower Court and it had, therefore, jurisdiction to proceed with the suit with a view to the framing of a final decree. The provision in section 97 of the Code, under which a party is precluded from disputing the correctness of a preliminary decree in any appeal preferred from a final decree, is obviously one of mere procedure intended to obviate the unnecessary expenses that may otherwise be incurred in allowing proceedings to be carried to the stage of a final decree on a preliminary decision, which may be upset in the Appellate Court. Accordingly it cannot be said that an appeal from a preliminary decree is one that necessarily ousts the jurisdiction of the lower Court when the suit is still pending before it for a final decree. The case is quite a different one to that where a final decree has been passed in a suit and an appeal is made from that decree. There, of course, the suit is not pending before the Court but has been finally concluded by the decree. In view, therefore, of the express provisions of Order XLI, rule 5, and in the absence of any provision which shows that the Legislature intended the contrary, I am clearly of opinion that the lower Court had jurisdiction to entertain the application.

I would, therefore, reverse the lower Court's order and remand the case for disposal according to law. No order as to costs.

I also set aside all stay orders passed by this Court, without prejudice to any application that may be put before the lower Court for stay of the proceedings in view of the alleged compromise.

KEMP, A. J. C.—I agree with all that my learned brother has said. As to whether the compromise should be recorded in the lower Court or here, I note that the letters addressed to the Commissioner purport to inform him that the suit has been settled, and in one letter, dated the 23rd August, the Commissioner is informed that on Kimatram presenting his consent to this effect to the Court, "We will take steps to withdraw the appeal pending in the Judicial Commissioner's Court" and requests the Commissioner to report to the Court.

Order reversed; Case remanded.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 13, O. XLIII, r. 1 (a)—Ex parte decree—Application to set aside decree—Order granting application—Appeal, whether lies.

An order granting an application under Order IX, rule 13, of the Civil Procedure Code is not appealable.

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Mainpuri, dated the 2nd January 1919.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. P. Ghosh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection has been taken to the hearing of this appeal on the ground that no appeal lies. The order from which the appeal has been presented purports to be an order under Order IX, rule 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The application on which that order was passed was an application under the Order and rule mentioned above. From an order granting such an application no appeal lies under Order XLIII, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 2—Satisfaction of decree—Certification, mode of—Reference to satisfaction in pleadings, whether sufficient.

In order that a satisfaction of a decree may be treated as a proper satisfaction under Order XXI, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, the adjustment should be notified to the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree in a form which will come before it in its execution work. A casual reference to such an adjustment in a plaint or other civil proceeding is not sufficient. [p. 902, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the Joint Judge, Hyderabad.

Mr. Motiram Idanmal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Gopaldas Jhamatmal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

FAWCETT, J. C.—In this appeal the appellants are judgment debtors under a decree obtained by the respondents in 1908. On 21st April 1911, some of the judgment-debtors transferred certain property to the judgment-creditors in satisfaction of the decree, but the satisfaction was not certified to the Court. Subsequently, the judgment creditors sued one of the judgment-debtors on a rent note in respect of the same property and obtained a decree. But in that suit the defendant pleaded that he had no right to transfer the property and that some others had an interest in and possession of it. Later on another person sued and obtained a share of the property and the judgment creditors never got the possession. On the 27th January 1914, the judgment-creditors filed the present execution application and the Sub-Judge of Tando dismissed it on the ground of satisfaction, holding the rent suit to be a sufficient certification and that the limitation was saved by some of the judgment-debtors being minors. On appeal the Joint Judge of Hyderabad reversed this order and directed the execution application to be restored to the file. The judgment-debtors now come in second appeal against this decision.

One of the issues raised in the lower Courts was whether there was a satisfaction of the decree in fact, and the Joint Judge has answered this in the negative. This finding of fact is, however, really irrelevant. If a decree-holder accepts an adjustment in whole or part satisfaction of his decree, and this adjustment is certified to the Court, as required by Order XXI, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, then such adjustment operates as an entire or partial bar (as the case may be) to the execution of the decree; and the fact that the adjustment may not be properly acted upon by the judgment-debtors or otherwise does not fructify in the manner anticipated by the decree-holder, is clearly immaterial. The only real issues in this case are: (1) whether the adjustment of 21st April 1911 has been sufficiently certified by the Court under Order XXI, rule 2, and (2) whether the period of 90 days prescribed for certification by judgment-debtor can be extended in this case under section 6 or 7 of the Limitation Act.

On both points I agree with the view taken by the Joint Judge. The plaint in the rent suit is not before this Court, so we do not know if it at all referred to the decree now sought to be executed, but even if it did, this cannot be treated as a proper certifying under Order XXI, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. The words "the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree" clearly imply that the adjustment should be notified to the Court in a form which will come before it in its execution work. A casual refererce to such an adjustment in a plaint or other civil suit proceeding would ordinarily not be noticed at all by a Court in its execution branch. Nor can the execution application of 27th January 1914 be treated as a sufficient certifying under the rule. The application does not ask the Court to recognize the adjustment, but expressly repudiates it. In other words, the application does not certify it as an adjustment "to the satisfaction of the decree holder" as required by the rule. I agree on this point with the view taken by Mahmood, J., in Fateh Muhammad v. Gopal Das (1).

(1) 7 A. 424 at pp. 431, 432; A. W. N. (1885) 76; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 593.

It was contended that the decree-holder had elected to abide by the contract of 21st April 1911 and this election was irrevocable, so that he could not now repudiate it. But as pointed out in Secretary of State for India v. Bapuji (2), there is no room for estoppel in such a case.

On the other point I agree with the Joint Judge and have nothing to add. I would, therefore, confirm the lower Court's decree and dismiss the appeal with costs.

RAYMOND, A. J. C.—I concur.

Trust, resulting—Creditor put in possession of estate, position of—Purchase made in creditor's name—Real purchaser, whether can recover possession from creditor—Consideration, payment of, proof of—Oral evidence, admissibility of—Sale for arrears of rent due in respect of period prior to purchase—Creditor, position of—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 76 (c).

R., the father of the plaintiffs, being indebted, his properties were purchased in execution of a decree against him by P., who agreed to return the properties to R. in consideration of a payment to him of Rs. 2,150. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 advanced a certain sum to R. as a loan, and on R. himself paying the balance, P. executed a kobala in the names of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in 1897. A year after, R., being unable to pay interest on the sum advanced by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, put the latter in possession of the properties to enable them to take the profits until re-payment of the debt due. After the execution of the kobala, some of the properties in suit, viz., plots Nos. 1 to 12, were sold for arrears of rent due for a period prior to the kobala and were purchased by the defendants themselves. The plaintiffs then brought these suits within 12 years of the execution of the kobala for recovery of possession of the properties upon payment of the amount due to the defendants:

Held, (1) that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were in the position of creditors in possession, and there was a resulting trust so far as these properties were concerned and that, therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled to get back the properties upon payment of the amount due to the defendants; [p. 905, col. 2; p. 906, col. 1.]

(2) that it was competent for the plaintiffs, whose father was the real purchaser, to prove the payment of the purchase-money by parol, even though it was expressed otherwise in the kobala; [p. 906, col. 1.]

(3) that under section 76 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were responsible for the sale of plots Nos. 1 to 13 in execution of decrees for arrears of rent, even though they were for a period prior to the execution of the kobala, and that, therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover those plots also. FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bepin Behari Ghose (with him Babu Bankim Chandra Mukherjee), for the Appellants.—The defendants are the appellants. One Ramdayal left three sons T., D. and K. D. is plaintiff in appeal No. 951 and K. is plaintiff No. 2 T. is defendant in this appeal and plaintiff in the other. The properties of Ramdayal were sold in execution of a decree to the Hazras in 1895. The latter sold them in 1897 to defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Plaintiffs' allegation is that they and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 paid the entire money, that the defendants were mere benamidars. Plaintiffs arranged to pay off the defendants, but on their failure to do so the defendants were put in possession in 1304. Subsequently the defendants were paid off but possession was refused in 1307. The first Court decreed the suit in part. The Court of Appeal decreed it in full. On appeal to this Hon'ble Court it was held that it was not a case of trust or of mortgage, but of simple possession. Hence the case was remanded. On remand the learned Judge holds that we are mere benamidars. It is admitted that I advanced more than $\frac{2}{3}$rds of the money and that I was put in possession. These, I submit, are sufficient indicia of my title. The lower Court could not have converted the suit into one for redemption. A mortgage must be made by a regular deed. Plaintiffs do not come on the basis of a mortgage. The arrangement was that on payment of a certain sum of money I would give up possession. That would be a personal covenant not running with the land. In order to make such a covenant enforceable in law, there ought to be a time limit. See Worthing Corporation v. Heather (1). Therefore the contract would be void in law. Their case is that they were refused reconveyance of property. The proper frame of the suit ought to have been one for specific performance, which ought to have been brought within three years. I am not a mere benamidar, a mask. I am taking exception to the finding of title by the learned Judge. There is no law under which the plaintiffs can claim relief. Neither is there any equity in their favour. Title under the law is in me. The deed is in my name and I paid the money. What then is my position? They have given up the position of a trust. The onus is on them to prove that they paid the purchase-money and that I was nobody. They obtained possession of a portion by using force against my tenants, which amounts to using force against me. Otherwise I have all along been in possession. Either I must be an owner or nobody. There is no middle position left. On the strength of the deed I fought other people and protected the properties. The view of the Appellate Court below, that I was bound to save the property from being sold, I submit, is a wrong view. The defendant is not a mere creditor but he is an owner. The contract of sale had been made by a deed. You can't call a person a benamidar if he substantially advances the purchase-money and further when there is a contract for reconveyance. Plaintiff sued in ejectment. The Judge has made us liable for all costs. We ought to get our costs of the litigation. Issues show that the defendants were purchasers burdened with a trust in plaintiffs' favour. So the ownership of the property was not questioned at all. They can only claim on the ground of trust. It is really enforcing an agreement to reconvey the properties to plaintiffs.

Babu Dhirendra Nath Sen), for the Respondents.—The plaintiffs' case has been proved to the hilt. The findings of both the Courts are concurrent and conclusive. It has been found as a fact that K. was in possession. There was an arrangement that the defendants would be trustees for the plaintiff. The position is this. They were in possession on the distinct understanding that they would recoup themselves with interest. This, in other words, amounts to an usufructuary mortgage. See section 76, Transfer of Property Act. The mortgagee must act like a prudent owner. The conduct of the defendants is seriously reprehensible. The lower Appellate Court is justified in deciding against the defendants. As regards the point of limitation, this is not a case of contract at all.

Babu Bepin Behari Ghose, in reply.—The position taken by them is that of an usufructuary mortgage. But that cannot be done by mere word of mouth. The mortgagee is not bound to save the estate from being sold for arrears of revenue accrued due before the mortgage. The mortgagor's duty is to make over possession free from all such difficulties. That has not been done. Section 76 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply.

JUDGMENT.—These two suits have had a chequered career. They were instituted in October 1909 and the judgment of the trial Court was delivered in September 1910. On appeal to this Court a remand order was made in May 1916. The successor of the District Judge who heard the appeal on remand delivered his judgment in February 1918 upholding the decision of the trial Court, except in respect of certain properties, namely, plots Nos. 1 to 13 of schedule "Ka". The defendants Nos. 1 to 4, 6 to 9 and 11 to 13 are the appellants before us. The plaintiffs are the three sons of one Ramdayal Mandal. Two of them instituted one suit and the third the other. The properties in suit belonged to him. The learned Subordinate Judge who tried the original suits found that Ramdayal became indebted and in execution of a decree against him one Protap Chandra Hazra purchased these properties, but Ramdayal persuaded him and his brother, who was joint with him, to return those properties in consideration of a payment of Rs. 2,450 Ramdayal, however, had not sufficient money and approached defendant No. 1, a creditor of his, and defendant No. 2, an intimate friend, to help him. These defendants advanced Rs. 1,676-8-0 as a loan and Ramdayal himself paid Rs. 9 0, and a kobala was obtained from the auction purchasers, in the names of those defendants on the 16th November 1897. After the purchase Ramdayal got possession of the properties and remained in possession for about one year, but as he could not pay the interest on the sum advanced by the defendants, he put them in possession of the properties to enable them to take the profits until repayment of the debt due. The trial Court found that at the time of the hearing Rs. 1,569-11-9 were due to the defendants and gave the plaintiffs a decree for possession conditional on payment by them of the said sum within three months. He further held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a decree for plots Nos. 1 to 13, which were sold for arrears of rent, as such arrears were for an earlier period, although the sale took place after the date of the kobala in dispute and the defendants were not liable to pay such arrears, and although they themselves purchased the plots upon such sale, they could not according to him be said to have purchased them, as trustees for Ramdayal or the plaintiffs.

On appeal the first District Judge held that the plaintiffs' suit must be looked upon as based, firstly, on a trust or, secondly, on a usufructuary mortgage created at or about 1304 and inasmuch as, according to him neither the trust nor the usufructuary mortgage could be proved without a deed, he dismissed the suits.

The plaintiffs then appealed to this Court, which held that the learned Judge had fallen into an error inasmuch as the plaintiffs had brought their suits on title, and not on the basis of a trust or of a mortgage and added that if the District Judge had gone into the facts and found title in favour of the plaintiffs, it was obvious that the defendants could not resist their claim to possession "unless by advancing and establishing some such plea as limitation, mortgage or other,"

They remanded the appeals that all necessary facts might be ascertained.

The appeals upon such remand were heard by a new District Judge who has practically confirmed the findings of the trial Court. He finds title in the plaintiffs and held that inasmuch as the suit was brought within 12 years of the denial of their title or within 12 years of the kobala, they were entitled to succeed. He has also held that the plaintiffs are entitled to plots Nos. 1 to 13, inasmuch as he finds that there are no materials to show whether any part of the arrears sued upon fell due after the defendants had entered into possession. The defendants, he held, were creditors in possession in the same way as usufructuary mortgagees and, therefore, they were in the position of trustees, and that they should have paid the arrears and could not take advantage of the situation. He found that they had paid Rs. 68 for purchasing those plots and has allowed them credit for that sum. He has further allowed the plaintiffs credit for Rs. 105 as value of some paddy which had admittedly been given by them to the defendants. Taking those two sums he found that Rs 1,522-11 9 was due to the defendants This amount, however, should be Rs. 1,532-11-9. With that modification he upheld the decree of the first Court.

It is argued before us that the learned Judge has not arrived at a proper conclusion having regard to the following facts, namely, that money was advanced by the defendants, that the conveyance was in their name, that the deed was in their possession and that admittedly at the time of the suit they were in possession of the property and that, therefore, it ought to have been held that they were the real purchasers. We are unable to take that view. It has been distinctly found by both Courts that the defendants advanced some money, no doubt the larger portion of the price, but the money was advanced by them as creditors and not by way of purchase. It has also been distinctly found that the document was taken in the names of the defendants to safeguard Ramdayal who was then heavily indebted, that Ramdayal effected sales of some of the properties covered by the kobala and repaid a portion of the debt due to the defendants, that he was actually in possession for about one year after the date of the purchase and that he subsequently made over possession to the defendants to repay themselves and upon such repayment to give possession back to Ramdayal. Ramdayal also was in possession of the sale certificate which had been granted to Protap Hazra; that it was an untrue suggestion made by the defendants that the plaintiffs had fraudulently obtained possession of the sale certificate Contemporaneous documents of sale show that money was obtained and applied for purposes of discharging the debt due to the defendants and that there is also an entry in Protap Hazra's book showing that Ramdayal was the real purchaser. There is no doubt from the facts found that the defendants were merely creditors to the extent of the advance made by them and when they were given possession of the properties by Ramdayal, they were in the position of usufructuary mortgagees. Reliance was also placed upon a kabuliyat for the homestead land which was executed by Ramdayal in favour of the defendants. Both Courts have found that the kabuliyat was a paper transaction and, therefore, of no value. It has also been found that no creditor was actually defeated by this benami transaction.

It has next been argued that if anything, the circumstances show that there was an agreement between the parties that upon repayment of the money the defendants were to reconvey the properties to Ramdayal and that inasmuch as the defendants had refused to make over possession in Magh 1308 (February 19 1) the suits were barred by limitation, as they are really, though not in name, suits for specific performance of a contract and are governed by Article 113 of the Limitation Act. We do not think they are such suits. They are merely suits to recover possession. As they were instituted within 12 years of the date of refusal on the date of the kobala, they are within time. Upon the facts of these cases there is no doubt whatever that the defendants are in the position of creditors in possession, and there is a resulting trust so far as these properties are concerned, and that, therefore, the plaintiffs are entitled to get back the properties upon payment of the amount due to the defendants. It was argued that it was not open to the plaintiffs to prove that the consideration was paid in the manner above stated, as their evidence contradicted the recital of payment as contained in the kobala. Even the Statute of Frauds does not affect, indeed expressly excepts, trusts arising by operation or construction of law, and it has been held in England that it is quite competent for the real purchaser to prove the payment of the purchase-money by parol, even though it be otherwise expressed in the deed.

It was lastly argued that the learned Judge was wrong in respect of plots Nos. 1 to 13. We are of opinion that he was not even, if it be conceded that the arrears were for a prior period. It is only necessary to refer to section 76 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act. The decision in this case also finds strong support from Monappa v. Surappa (2), where a similar order was made by the learned Judges in practically similar circumstances.

The appeals, therefore, will be dismissed with costs.

Appeal from the order of the District Judge, Sukkur.

Mr. Hassomal M. Gurbuxani, for the Appellant.

Mr. Tolasing Khushalsing, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.

FAWCETT, J. C.—The main facts in this case are as follows:—

One Chandumal obtained a decree in Suit No. 206 of 1912 against Puribai, Isarbai and others. This provided that Rs. 855 were to be paid by Puribai personally and Rs. 300 by Isarbai and that if Isarbai did not do so, then Puribai would be liable personally for the amount. Rs. 300 were paid by Isarbai and so she was discharged; also a sum of Rs. 125 was paid by Puribai. After her death the appellant, Kewalaram, who is an assignee of the decree-holder, made an execution application for the balance due under the decree, in which he asked for execution by the attachment and sale of certain immoveable property in the hands of Isarbai as the legal representative of Puribai. Isarbai opposed the application on the strength of a decree in Suit No. 26 of 1914. This was passed on an award, under which she obtained a portion of a house of Puribai free from any liability in respect of this judgment debt, and one Nihalchand, who is stated to have been a paramour of Puribai, obtained another house of Puribai subject to a liability for Puribai's debts. On the strength of this decree, which was admitted in evidence in the case, the Subordinate Judge, Shikarpur, dismissed the application with costs. The assignee, Kewalram, appealed from this order to the District Judge on the ground that the appellant was not a party to the award-decree and was not bound by Isarbai's release from liability as a legal representative of Puribai. In his judgment the District Judge, after referring to a contention of the respondent's Pleader that the appellant in collusion with Nihalchand was trying to get hold of the part of Puribai's property that was given to her sister Isarbai free of liability, says that the appellant's remedy was to proceed against Puribai's property in the hands of Nihalchand and not to harass Isarbai. He accordingly confirmed the lower Court's order and dismissed the appeal with costs. Kewalram has brought a second appeal, which now is before us.

Mr Hassomal for the appellant has raised three main contentions, viz:—

(1) that the award-decree is inadmissible in evidence;

(2) that even if admissible, it does not affect the appellant, who was not a party to it; and

(3) that the decree is a nullity in so far as it decided the question of the validity of Puribai's Will and the rights arising thereunder.

Mr. Tolasing, on the other hand, contends that the orders of the lower Court have been properly passed in the exercise of an equitable jurisdiction, on the principle of marshalling, and that the orders merely ask the judgment-creditor to proceed first against the property of Puribai in the hands of Nihalchand. He admits that the decree in itself is not one that is binding upon the appellant, and that, if he is unable to execute his decree against the property in the hands of Nihalchand, he has the right to proceed for the balance against the property in the hands of Isarbai, inspite of the award-decree freeing it from liability for Puribai's debts. The first question that arises is, therefore, whether the lower Courts have an equitable jurisdiction to refuse the application against Puribai's property until the judgment-creditor has first exhausted his remedies against Nihalchand's. Mr. Tolasing relies on the cases of Wali Muhammad v. Turab Ali (1) and Nimbaji Tulsiram v. Vadia Venkati (2) in support of his contention. These do support the view that in execution regard may be had to equity (cf., also section 49 of the Code) but at the same time, as remarked in Akhund Abdul Wahid v. Manager, Encumbered Estates (3), equity cannot be allowed to override statutory law. Has then the judgment-creditor a statutory right to proceed against whichever of the two legal representatives of Puribai he prefers? If he has, then I do not think it can be upset on mere equitable grounds.

Under section 50 of the Code the judgment creditor "may apply to the Court" to execute his decree against a legal representative; this does not say his application must be granted. Section 51 says the Court "may order execution of the decree . . . by attachment and sale of any property;" even if 'may' is construed as 'shall' in a case where there is a liability to such attachment and sale, still this is "subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed" by the rules in Schedule I. Under Order XXI, rule 17 (4), the Court on a properly framed application "shall, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, order execution of the decree according to the nature of the application." This, therefore, is subject to the provisions of Order XXI, rule 22, under which a notice has to be issued to a legal representative against whom execution is sought. It is also subject to Order XXI, rule 23 (2), under which where the legal representative "offers any objection to the execution of the decree, the Court shall consider such objection and make such order as it thinks fit." This leaves the matter to the discretion of the Court, which, however, has to be exercised on judicial principles. But these include equitable considerations, and I think, therefore, that it is open to the Court to consider the equities between the two legal representatives who are parties to the application, viz., Isarbai and Nihalchand.

That being so, the award-decree became a relevant fact in considering these equities under sections 7 and 9 of the Evidence Act and is admissible under section 43.

In view of this decree I think it is clearly equitable that the judgment-creditor should be made to proceed against Nihalchand, before he proceeds against Isarbai. No doubt the doctrine of marshalling does not directly apply, but the rule of 'equality' on which that doctrine is based applies, inasmuch as equity tries to effect a distribution of losses proportionate to the several liabilities of the persons concerned (Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XIII, Article 79, at pages 69-70 and Article 167 at pages 144-45). In this case Isarbai has a legitimate claim to the protection of the Court, which should be regarded under Order XXI, rule 23 (2), the more so since to disregard it might entail subsequent litigation by Isarbai suing to be reimbursed by Nihalchand.

(3) 19 Ind. Cas. 838; 6 S. L. R. 250.

I, therefore, think the lower Courts had jurisdiction to refuse the application against Isarbai: but, on the other hand, the judgment-creditor should not suffer unduly by the Court's regard of the equities between her and Nihalchand. The order under rule 23 should, in my opinion, not be an absolute dismissal of the application, but one allowing it to be amended within a certain time so as to pray for execution against the property of Puribai in the hands o Nihalchand and if the whole decretal debt is not satisfied by such execution, then for the balance against the property of Puribai in the hands of Isarbai. An amendment of this kind is, I think, permissible: cf. Sakarlal v. Bai Parvatibai (4) and Durga Das v. Dewraj (5).

I would, therefore, modify the order of the lower Court by directing that the execution application may be amended accordingly within a fortnight or such further time as the Court may allow and that on its being so amended the execution application be remanded to the Sub-Judge's Court for disposal according to law, but that otherwise the appeal should be dismissed.

As appellant has substantially failed, I think he should bear the respondent's costs of the appeal.

KEMP, A. J. C.—This is one of those cases which, if the suspicions of the learned District Judge are correct, furnish an illustration of the disgraceful way in which a Hindu lady can be persecuted by litigation in this country

One Chandumal Khemchand, described as a Pleader of Shikarpur, entered into a champertous agreement with certain clients for payment to him of Rs. 1,000 in the event of success in certain litigation. After that litigation his clients, one of whom was the deceased Hindu lady Puribai, refused to pay and he filed a Suit No. 203 of 1912 against them, joining the present respondent Isarbai as a party. He gave up the male defendants in that suit and proceeded against the two ladies Puribai and Isarbai. Somehow or other these two ladies were induced to compromise the claim in the following manner:—There was to be a decree for Rs. 855 against Puribai, but if Isarbai who was to be liable for only Rs. 300 of that amount paid Rs. 300, Puribai was liable for the balance only. The suit was dismissed against the male defendants. I can only assume these two ladies had not the benefit of independent advice when they were thus induced to hold themselves liable for practically the whole claim in order to free the male defendants.

After this decree Puribai died. A dispute as to her property arose between her sister Isarbai and the respondent Nihalchand, who is described by the learned District Judge as Puribai's paramour, as to the succession to her property. There is also some talk of a Will of Puribai in the arguments. In any case, the matter was referred to arbitration and there is an allegation that one of the arbitrators was partial. However, an award was passed and filed in Court by which a portion of a house was allotted to Isarbai and another house to Nihalchand and the latter was to undertake all the liabilities of Puribai's estate. The present appellant is the assignee of the decree in Suit No. 203 of 1912 and claims to execute the decree against Puribai's estate in the hands of Isarbai. Isarbai had paid before this the Rs. 300 for which she personally was liable. Both the lower Courts have dismissed the appellant's application for execution referring him to Parbai's estate in the hands of Nihalchand. The learned District Judge was clearly influenced, and, in my opinion, very properly, by the suspicion that the appellant is colluding with Nihalchand to make the estate in Isarbai's hands liable whilst the award says the estate in Nihalchand's hands is to be liable.

No doubt if neither the present appellant nor his transferor Chandumal was a party to the award or accepted it, that award cannot bind the appellant who is at liberty under section 50, Civil Procedure Code, to proceed against the estate of Puribai wherever it may be. If, however, the appellant or before the assignment Chandumal knew of and accepted the terms of the award between Isarbai and Nihalchand, then the appellant cannot go back on the term making Puribai's estate in Nihalchand's hands alone liable. The Court would be exercising its discretion under Order XXI, rule 24 (1), correctly, in my opinion, in such a case in dismissing the application so far as execution against the estate in Isarbai's hands is concerned. But Order XXI, rule 23 (2), gives the Court power to consider any objection the legal representative may have to urge and to pass such order as it thinks fit. Under the circumstances of this case I think an order refusing execution against the estate in Isarbai's hands, until the transferee has proceeded first against the estate in Nihalchand's hands, would be a fit and proper order to make. I, therefore, agree with the order the learned Judicial Commissioner proposes to pass in the appeal.

(5) 33 C. 306; 3 C. L. J. 112; 10 C. W. N. 297.

Order of the lower Court modified and the case remanded.

APPEAL FROM THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

July 26, 1918.

Present:—Lord Buckmaster, Lord Dunedin and Lord Wrenbury.

SIVA PRASHAD SINGH—
versus
THE TATA IRON AND STEEL Co., (LD.)—RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Lease, construction of—Surrender, option of, on six months' notice—Notice given by lessee—Surrender, deed of, execution of, after expiry of date of notice—Determination of lease, date of—Rent, liability for.

The Raja of Jeriah granted a mining lease to the defendant firm upon certain terms and conditions as to the payment of rent and royalty upon coal excavated. The lease was for a term of 99 years and contained a clause giving the lessees a right to surrender the lease upon giving six months' notice and satisfying the conditions as to rent and royalty. The lessees, not finding the business profitable, gave the Raja notice that upon the expiration of six months from the date thereof their rights and obligations under the lease would cease, and they went out of possession and informed the Raja of the fact. The Raja's agent demanded a deed of surrender, and negotiations for the execution of this deed and for the payment of rent and royalty were carried on till after the period of six months had expired. When, eventually, the deed was executed and delivered, payment of the rent and royalty was tendered, the same being calculated up to the date of the expiry of the notice, but the Raja refused to accept payment, and instituted the present suit for rent and royalty due up to date of the execution of the deed of surrender. The High Court held that the lease had been determined by the notice and dismissed the suit. On appeal by the plaintiff to the Privy Council:

Held, that the suit had been rightly dismissed, that the request by the Raja's agent for the execution of a deed of surrender merely transferred the payment to the date when the surrender was executed and delivered, the fact that that date was subsequent to the date of the expiration of the notice would make no difference for its operation would take effect from the date when the notice expired whenever it was executed, and payment upon this date was all that was required [p. 913, col 1.]

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the Calcutta High Court (Chapman and Mullick, JJ.), dated the 22nd February 1916, which reversed a judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Perulia.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. Upjohn, K.C., De Gruyther, K.C., and J. M. Parikh, for the Appellant.—Clause 9 of the lease provided for giving notice to quit. It should expire at the end of the half year or the year. The notice given was, therefore, invalid. Defendants have not paid as per the lease the rents and royalties on the date of expiry of the period fixed by the notice. It is a condition precedent to the validity of the notice. Grey v. Friar (1). There is no estoppel here at all. There is no waiver on the part of plaintiff and the agent of plaintiff has no power to give up any rights of plaintiff.

Messrs. P. O. Lawrence, K. C., A. M. Dunne, K. C., and Brown, for the Respondents.—On a proper construction of the notice, no payment is necessary at the time of giving notice. The exact amount could not be ascertained at that date. Clause 9 is governed by clause 3. Plaintiff's manager also agreed by demanding a formal deed of surrender to accept payment when the deed of surrender was executed. If the manager had authority to accept notice, he had also authority to fix the time for payment for the benefit of the estate. It is not contrary to the provisions of the lease. The conduct of the manager would amount to waiver and it is binding on the plaintiff. Reference was made to sections 126, 229 and 237 of the Indian Contract Act.

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—The appellant is the heir and legal representative of Raja Sri Sri Durga Prashad Singh, the plaintiff in the suit out of which this appeal has arisen. The proceedings were instituted to recover from the respondents the sum of rupees 26,237-12-0, being the alleged arrears of royalties due under two mining leases granted by the Raja to the respondents and dated respectively the 4th March, 1908 and the 29th September 1908. The defence to the claim was that leases had been duly determined by notice, and it is this question and this alone which arises for consideration upon the present appeal, the High Court of Judicature in Bengal having, in reversal of the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, dismissed the action.

So far as the points to be determined are concerned, the leases may be regarded as identical, the variation in date, in the royalties payable and the period allowed before payment begins being the only differences between the two, as will appear in the course of this judgment, these differences are immaterial to the present dispute. Both leases appear to have been in the vernacular and the obscurity of their terms is faithfully reflected in the translation.

The lease of the 4th March 1908 is the one accepted by their Lordships for the purpose of examining the clauses that bear upon the dispute. By it a grant was made by the Raja to the respondent Company of coal, land and mining rights in certain Mouzahs belonging to the ancestral Zemindari of the Raja of Purgunnah Jheria for a term of 999 years. By clause 1 certain royalties were fixed for each ton of coal, and by clause 2 it was provided that the royalties mentioned should be payable quarterly, "i. e., in four Kists of Baisakh, Sraban, Kartic and Magh."

By clause 3 certain minimum royalty was provided, which after the second year obliged the lessee to pay "an annual minimum royalty" of 13,904 rupees per annum until the expiration of the term, with a provision that if the royalties paid under the earlier clause were found on taking the accounts at the end of each year to be less than the minimum royalty, the lessee should be bound to make up the loss, and pay the sum of 13,904 rupees in full within the two months of the following year. The words in which this provision is couched are important, and they are as follows: —

"If on taking accounts at the end of each year it be found that the royalty paid by you for the said lands for that particular year is less than the said minimum royalty, then you shall be bound to make up the said loss and pay the said sum of 13,904 rupees 0 annas 0 Gundahs in full within the two months of the following year."

By clause 6 power was given to the lessees to take the necessary surface land for the purpose of carrying on the colliery business at certain fixed rents per Bigha, and this rent was to become due at the end of each Bengali year. There were consequently three distinct payments to be made.

1. The royalties payable per ton of coal to be paid quarterly.

2. The annual minimum royalty to be paid within two months after the expiration of the year satisfied pro tanto by the royalties payable under 1, the accounts being taken at the end of the year and payment made within two months of the following year.

3. The surface rent due at the end of each Bengali year.

By clause 9 a right was given to the lessee to surrender the term, and it is in the alleged exercise of the rights so conferred that the respondent contends that the leases have been determined. The words of the clause are, therefore, important, and they are as follows: —

"That, if you so wish, you shall be entitled to surrender all or any of the Mouzahs hereby leased out to you by giving me six months' written notice, which you shall be competent to give me by a registered letter and paying the minimum royalty for the said six months, i. e., a half of the annual minimum royalty. But I shall not accept any surrender for a portion of any of the Mouzahs, neither shall you be entitled to surrender so long as any rent or royalty remains unpaid. Instead of relinquishing all the Mouzahs settled, you will be able to relinquish any one or more of those Mouzahs by giving six months' notice in writing in the above manner. If you surrender any one or more Mouzahs in this way, you shall be bound to pay the whole of the minimum royalty for all the Mouzahs leased out as fixed in paragraph 3 of the deed for the remaining Mouzahs, i. e., you shall not be entitled to get a proportionate reduction in the minimum royalty of 13,904 rupees fixed as above for surrendering one or more than one Mouzah in the above way."

The Company duly entered into possession of the mining property under the said lease, carried on mining operations, and from time to time paid the royalties and rents as agreed. But the undertaking does not appear to have prospered, and the respondents attempted to obtain a reduction of the minimum royalty payable under the lease. In this they failed, and on the 11th May 1912 they sent to the Raja personally a registered letter of which the relevant parts are as follows :—

"By the terms of the respective leases it is open to us to relinquish the properties by giving you six months' previous notice in writing. Please take note, therefore, that we hereby wish to relinquish the undermentioned areas held under the leases, and that after the expiry of six months from this date, upon the payment of all royalties due to you, we shall not be responsible for any further minimum royalty, rent, etc., and that all our obligations under the two leases would cease and terminate after the expiry of six months from this date," at the same time according to the evidence of the respondents' manager they went out of possession of the property and informed the Raja of the fact.

The Raja handed the notice to Mr. Smith, who was his general manager, and he, in accordance with what he regarded as the usual practice of the estate, requested the respondents to execute a formal deed of surrender. The lessees placed the matter in the hands of Messrs. Morgan and Co, their Solicitors, and they on the 16th September wrote to Mr. Smith stating that they held the leases, and asking if he wished them to prepare a deed of relinquishment, or whether he would send the form of document he required. No immediate answer was given to this letter, and on the 30th October 1912 they wrote again, and to these letters on the 13th November Mr. Smith sent answer in the following terms :—

"Dear Sirs,

"I must apologise for not having replied to yours of the third September [an obvious mistake for 16th September] and the 30th October earlier.

"I am enclosing the copy of a relinquishment deed given us by another tenant. A deed of this sort will, I understand, be quite sufficient for our purpose.

"All dues on the holdings must be tendered along with the instrument for acceptance.

"Yours faithfully,
"A. J. SMITH,
"Manager."

To this Messrs. Morgan replied on the 30th November 1912 asking for a statement of what Mr. Smith said was due for the royalties. There was certainly no obligation cast on Mr. Smith to comply with this request, but it was an obvious and sensible business proposal, and indeed it seems so to have been regarded by Mr. Smith, who answered on the 1st December saying the matter was receiving attention and that he would write at an early date. This promise seems to have been overlooked, for nothing transpired between the parties till the 28th April, when Mr. Smith wrote to the respondents saying that the minimum royalty was much in arrear and asking that it might be liquidated at an early date. On the 3rd May 1913, Messrs. Morgan & Co. wrote again to Mr. Smith recalling his promise, and asking him to proceed with the matter. Mr. Smith then wrote on the 5th May and explained what had happened in the following terms:—

"From the Manager, Jheria Raj Estate, to Messrs. Morgan & Co., Calcutta.

"Dear Sirs,

"I am in receipt of yours of the 3rd.

"We addressed a note to Messrs. Tata and Sons on the 28th April asking them to pay the minimum royalty due.

"I put the matter of the account before our legal adviser, and he refused to give any opinion or make up a statement of your dues, as he said you were in as good a position to do so as he was, and he failed to see why he should take the responsibility. Your obvious course was to abide by the terms of the document when relinquishing the properties, and tender the money with the relinquishment deed.

"A. J. SMITH."

Upon receipt of this Messrs. Morgan & Co. immediately made out what they regarded as the account, and sent the statement on the 16th May with an offer to send a cheque if the account were accepted, and to this Mr. Smith replied, on the 22nd May, stating for the first time that the Raja did not recognise the relinquishment as legal or in accordance with the agreement between the parties. First, because it did not expire with the end of the year, and secondly, because it was not served after full payment of all dues and he accordingly claimed the total amount of the royalties due to date.

An attempt was made to settle the dispute that had thus arisen by reference to arbitration, and this having failed, proceedings were instituted by the Raja to recover the rents on the ground that the leases were still on foot.

The argument put forward in Mr. Smith's letter is the main contention advanced by the appellants both before their Lordships and in the Court below.

In order to test the value of these contentions it is necessary to examine closely the terms of the clause under which the notices were given. Dealing first with the question as to whether the notice could be given at all so as to expire at the expiration of any six months, it is important to observe that, however the clause is construed, the actual provisions of the lease cannot without some modification be made to fit into the circumstances.

The clause is open to three constructions. Either the notice must be one terminating with the end of the year; or it may be given at the expiration of a year of the term so as to terminate half way through another year; or it may be given at any time. Whichever view is adopted, the provisions as to calculation and payment of the royalties cannot be made to fit the circumstances arising with the giving of the notice. It could not have been the intention of the parties that the payment of one-half of the minimum rent should be made when the notice was given, as the amount cannot be calculated till a later date, since its payment may be satisfied by current royalties.

If, therefore, the first hypothesis is adopted and the notice is given in the middle of a current year, the half cannot be ascertained until the year of the lease has expired, and it is plain that then this cannot be the only payment made. In such an event the whole annual minimum royalty would be payable and not one-half, and either two calculations must be made —the one for the half year up to the date of the giving of the notice, and the other at its expiration—or the provision as to payment of the half is inappropriate and unnecessary. If, on the other hand, the notice is given at the beginning of the year, the royalties had to be calculated and the minimum rent fixed at a period half way through the year, and for this, again, the lease makes no provision. There is, therefore, nothing in the terms of the lease itself to fix the notice as one that must be given at any definite period, and there is consequently no reason why words should be introduced into clause 9 to limit the general application of the important right to surrender which is there conferred. The notices, therefore, were, in their Lordships' opinion, rightly given.

There remains the consideration as to whether the conditions prescribed as those that must be observed after the notice has been served have been faithfully obeyed. On behalf of the appellant it is contended that they were not, because of the provisions in clause 9 as to payment. These occur in two passages in the clause. The first which provides that it shall be competent to give notice "by a registered letter and paying the minimum royalty for the said six months, i. e., half of the annual minimum royalty" and the other which stipulates that the lessees shall "not be entitled to surrender so long as any rent or royalty remains unpaid."

The first provision does not give rise to much difficulty, for as has already been pointed out, at the time when the notice is served, it is impossible to know what the annual minimum royalty may be, and in this part of the clause there is nothing to fix a time within which that payment is to be made. The words do nothing except create an obligation to pay, and it is the latter part of the clause which provides the date of payment.

The latter provision is more precise. After the notice is given, unless all the prescribed conditions are satisfied at the date when the notice expires, the lease will not be terminated, and the notice will become ineffectual. It is probable that the expression contemplated an actual surrender by handing back the leases with an endorsement, and had they been so surrendered there would, in their Lordships' opinion, have been thrown upon the lessee the difficult duty of calculating the exact amount of all the royalties that would then be due, bringing into account the royalty actually payable per ton of coal and apportioning the amount of the deed rent. But this course was not adopted. The Raja's agent, in pursuit of what he regarded as the practice of the estate and acting well within the general authority that he possessed, requested that the surrender should take place by execution of a deed. When once this course was adopted, the payment of the amount was, in their Lordships' opinion, transferred to the date when the surrender was executed and delivered. It would make no difference that this date was subsequent to the date for the expiration of the notice, for its operation would take effect from the date when the notice expired, whenever it was executed: Payment, therefore, upon this date was all that was required by the terms of the lease itself. But, apart from this, it was expressly directed by the letter of Mr. Smith of the 13th November. It is said that in all these acts Mr. Smith was acting in excess of his authority. But their Lordships are unable to agree with this contention.

Mr. Smith was the plaintiff's manager, and as his manager he stated in his evidence that all questions in connection with the estate came before him. In his own words he said:—

"I dealt with them, but not finally. The final decision rests with the Raja. After receiving the Raja's decisions I see them through. The Raja does not know much English. Questions of land settlement of coal property come to me for report. The terms of such property are finally settled by the Raja, I carrying out his orders."

Their Lordships think it is plain from these statements that while Mr. Smith had no power finally to fix or to vary the terms upon which the Raja's land is dealt with, yet he had full authority to carry out directions when once the general question had been determined, and when the notice was handed over to him by the Raja as manager, this clothed him with full authority to make such arrangements as he thought fit in the interest of the estate for carrying the notice into effect.

Their Lordships are in agreement with the learned Subordinate Judge that the principle of estoppel does not apply to this case at all, and they think the statement of the High Court that the plaintiff was estopped by conduct is not an appropriate explanation of the true position. The word "estoppel" is not infrequently used to cover transactions to which it has no proper application. In its essence it means that the party estopped has by conduct or language prevented himself from asserting the true facts on which he would otherwise have been entitled to rely. This is not what has happened in the present dispute. There was nothing to prevent the Raja from asserting the true character of the transaction, but this, for the reason already pointed out, does not entitle him to succeed in his claim.

For these reasons their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

VALLIAMMAI ACHI AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 134—Hindu Law—Mutt—Mahant, whether trustee—Property conveyed to mahant for benefit of mutt, nature of—Alienation by mahant, validity of—Suit to recover properties alienated Limitation.

The mahant of a mutt is a trustee, in law, of the mutt properties [p. 915, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where property is conveyed to the mahant of a mutt not for his personal use, but for the benefit of the mutt, the transaction is a conveyance in trust, within the meaning of Article 134 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act [p. 915, col. 1.]

A permanent alienation of mutt properties by a mahant for purposes not beneficial to the mutt is beyond his powers, and a suit to recover properties so alienated must be instituted within 12 years of the date of the alienation, otherwise it will be barred under Article 134 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Ramnad at Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 5 of 1917 (Appeal Suit No. 305 of 1916 of the District Court, Ramnad), preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Sivaganga, in Original Suit No. 14 of 1914.

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—This suit was brought by the Mahant of the Thiruvannamalai Mutt to recover possession of certain lands sold by his predecessor in 1895 to the father of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. He alleged that the sale was for no necessity and that it was not binding on the Mutt. The suit was decreed in the Court of the District Munsif but, on appeal, the Subordinate Judge dismissed it as barred by limitation.

The questions raised in the second appeal are, first, whether the Mahant of a Mutt is a trustee or a life-tenant; secondly, whether Article 134 of the Limitation Act applies to this case; and thirdly, whether the alienation was void or voidable, it being suggested that if it was only voidable, the cause of action to set it aside would only arise on plaintiff's accession to the headship of the Mutt. On the first point, in Ram Parkash Das v. Anand Das (1) and Basudeo Roy v. Jugalkishwar Das (2) the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council have laid it down that the Mahant of a Mutt is a trustee of the Mutt properties. In Baluswami Aiyer v. Venkitaswamy Naicken (3) it was held that a Mahant was a trustee and not a life-tenant as regards the properties of the Mutt. In Obla Venkatachalapathi Aiyer v. Thirugnana Sambanda Pandara Sannadhi (4) a doubt was raised whether this proposition had not been too broadly expressed in Baluswami Aiyer v. Venkitaswamy Naicken (3). In Kailasam Pillay v. Nataraja Tambiran (5), this question was again discussed and Benson and Wallis, JJ., said that it could not be predicated that a Mahant was a trustee in all cases, but it must depend on the constitution of the particular institution. Sankaran Nair, J., said that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the Mahant was not a trustee and that he was not a life-tenant either. In Muthusamier v. Sree Sree Methanithi Swamiyar (6) it was said that the position of a Mahant was analogous in many ways to that of the estate of a Hindu female heir, and in Vidyapurna Tirtha Swami v. Vidyanidhi Tirtha Swami (7) it was observed that the Mahant was not a mere trustee but was a corporation sole.

The last named authorities contain attempts to strictly define the position of a Mahant by comparing it to the position of Hindu females or corporations sole in English Law. But they do not show that, generally speaking, the Mahant is not a trustee. The learned Judges who decided these cases were careful not to say that the Mahant of a Mutt was not a trustee. I think that he is not the less a trustee, because his position has been in some respects compared to that of a Hindu female or to that of a corporation sole in English Law. On the whole, there is no good reason for distinguishing the case of this Mutt from those which came under the consideration of the Privy Council in their latest rulings. I hold that the plaintiff and his predecessor were trustees in law.

The next question is whether the suit property was "conveyed or bequeathed in trust" within the meaning of Article 134 of the Limitation Act. Exhibit II is the document under which this property was conveyed by the perpetual lessees under the Devastanam. It is dated 28th July 1886 and the Mutt became the perpetual lessee from that date subject to an annual payment to the Devastanam. As the property was not conveyed to the Mahant for his personal use but sold to him for the benefit of the Mutt, there can be no doubt that the transaction was a conveyance in trust.

Lastly, the Privy Council case in Abhiram Goswami Mohant v. Shyama Charan Nandi (8), which is relied on for the appellant as showing that an alienation by a Mahant for a purpose not beneficial to the Mutt would be good for the lifetime of the Mahant for the time being, was the case of a lease in which the personal right of the Mahant was put forward. There would have been no injury to the estate of the Mutt by the granting of a lease for the Mahant's lifetime, but a permanent lease would have been an alienation beyond his powers, and in this sense the Privy Council must be understood as holding that the lease was only valid during the lifetime of the Mahant in office. Exhibit I being a document of out-and-out sale executed in October 1895, this suit brought in 1914 more than 12 years after the sale, was clearly barred and the Subordinate Judge was right in deciding this point in favour of the defendants.

The second appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I entirely agree with the conclusions and reasoning of my learned brother in the judgment just now pronounced by him. I only wish to add with the greatest respect to the decision in Kailasam Pillay v. Nataraja Tambiran (5) that it has always seemed to me a very startling proposition that the ascetic head of a Mutt, who is supposed to have renounced the world and all its vanities, whose fall from a strict life of continence or Brahmacharya disqualified him from holding the office of Matadipathi (which involves the initiation of others spiritually fitted into the holy order of Sanyasa) but who was (in degenerate mediæval ages), however, allowed to be the manager and the trustee and thus the legal owner of properties dedicated to the support and advancement of religion and charity generally and of a particular school of monastic institution and doctrine specially, should be considered not to be a trustee of any institution at all, unless the person who alleges him to be a trustee proves that fact by evidence.

In the case in Muthusamier v. Sree Sree Methanithi Swamiyar (6) I had, with great respect to the decision in Vidyapurna Tirtha Swami v. Vidyanidhi Tirtha Swami (7), ventured to express serious misgivings about the soundness of the view conferring on the heads of these Mutts the status of corporation sole. I had also expressed grave doubts of the soundness of the prevailing view that these heads could spend the income of their Mutt institutions in even immoral, extravagant and inappropriate ways without question and without liability to removal for any misconduct and even for patent unfitness (through a notoriously profligate and unascetic life) to hold the position of the head of a monastic institution.

However, I am clear that their Lordships of the Privy Council have in their recent decisions, referred to in my learned brother's judgment, not accepted the view enunciated in Kailasam Pillay v. Nataraja Tambiran (5) or Vidyapurna Tirtha Swami v. Vidyanidhi Tirtha Swami (7) and that these decisions are, therefore, no longer of binding force.

As regards Abhiram Goswami Mohant v. Shyama Charan Nandi (8) both Miller, J., and myself considered it carefully in Muthusamier v. Sree Sree Methanithi Swamiyar (6) and our opinion as to the exact scope of their Lordships' decision in that case is (I am glad to find) supported by the opinion of my learned brother.

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Hyderabad.

Mr. Rupchand Bilaram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Fatehchand Assudomal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

KEMP, A. J. C.—This is a second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Hyderabad, decreeing plaintiffs-respondents' suit filed in the Court of the Sub Judge of Hyderabad and reversing the decision of the Sub-Judge dismissing the suit.

The facts of this case are as follows:—

The plaintiffs are the widow and sons of the deceased Lalchand. The defendant is the son of the deceased by another wife. Certain disputes having arisen between the parties, they were referred on 27th September 1911 to arbitration. The award was made on 4th February 1912. An application to file it was presented on 20th February 1912, and on 27th February 1912 the award was made a rule of Court in Suit No. 6 of 1912. The plaintiff Devibai got a copy of the award decree on 15th November 1912. In the award itself there is a provision regarding the payment to Devibai of Rs. 25-4-0 per mensem so long as a certain liquor shop therein mentioned is in defendant appellant, Chainrai's name. The words "up to the year 1913 14" have been interpolated in this clause, so that with the interpolation it runs "that or so long as it is continued from year to year in Chainrai's name up to the year 1913 14 the claimant Musammat Devibai is entitled to take from the opposite party for Nos. 2 and 3 and for her expenses of living Rs. 25 4 0 per mensem," etc. The words which have been interpolated have not been initialled by the arbitrator although other interpolations have. The decree in terms of the award shows the disputed words in the body of it and not as an after insertion.

Clearly, therefore, the disputed words were inserted in the award before the decree was signed by the Judge.

Plaintiffs say the words were fraudulently inserted without their consent after the award was passed. The defendant says the words were in the award as originally published by the arbitrator and that they are not a subsequent insertion. Plaintiffs on 21st May 1914 applied to the Court which passed the decree to rectify it. They were ordered to file an affidavit, but did not proceed with the application but filed this suit instead praying for rectification of the decree by expunging the words objected to. The Sub Judge dismissed the suit, holding there was no after insertion and that no fraud had been proved. The lower Appellate Court reversed that order and decreed the suit, holding that there had been a fraudulent interpolation in regard to the words referred to after the award had been published.

CHAINRAI v. DEVIBAI.

This is a second appeal and we accept the finding of fact that there has been an after-insertion of the words "up to 1913 14" in the award. The arbitrator's evidence shows he did not insert those words in his award and they are further not initialled by him, although clearly they are words so materially affecting his decision that they should have been initialled if he had intended to insert them.

That the words were fraudulently interpolated is also clear from the fact that they materially affect plaintiff's right under the award in favour of the defendant.

Certain other objections have, however, been raised before us. Firstly, it is contended that no suit will lie to rectify the decree of another Court and, in any event, such a suit cannot be brought in a Court of inferior grade. But as has been pointed out in Kusadhaj v. Broja Mohan (1), a suit will lie to rectify a decree based on a compromise, as the decree is merely the formal expression given, in the present case, to the contract embodied in the reference and award. Quite apart from the fact that here we are dealing not with a case of mistake but with one of fraud, the distinction between a suit to set aside a decree passed after trial and one passed on a compromise has been very clearly pointed out in the judgment of Jenkins, C. J., in the case of Kusadhaj v. Broja Mohan (1). That case is also an authority for saying that where fraud is alleged a suit will lie to set aside a decree. If a suit will in such a case lie to set aside the decree I fail to see why, where the decree is based on a reference and award, a suit will not equally lie to rectify it. Section 31 of the Specific Relief Act permits the rectification of the award and, if it permits that, it also permits the rectification of the decree which is based on and gives formal expression to it. Indeed the correct procedure in England by which such a claim as this can be asserted is by action, and not by re-hearing nor by application to the Court in which the judgment or order was given or made. [Flower v. Lloyd (2), Brooks v. Lord Mostyn (3) and Davenport v. Stofford (4).]

I do not mean by this that no application would lie under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, but only that there is no bar to plaintiffs' suit as framed. As to whether an application under section 151 would lie I express no opinion.

Nor do I see why such a suit as the present one cannot be brought in a Court of inferior grade to the one which passed the decree, provided such inferior Court had jurisdiction as to the subject matter of the suit. The case of Arunachellam Chetty v. Sabhapathy Chetty (5) is a distinct authority on the point. In my opinion, therefore, there is nothing in this contention.

Then it is argued that no particulars of the fraud alleged were given, but it seems to me that the fraud was sufficiently particularised to enable the defendant-appellant to know the case he had to meet. Of course, it would be impossible for the plaintiff-respondent to say exactly at what moment the fraud was committed. That is a matter peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant-appellant. That the fraud was effected by him or some one on his behalf is clear from the fact that the defendant-appellant is the only person to gain by the fraud and that he supports it.

Then it is contended that the present suit is barred by reason of the dismissal of the earlier application for rectification of the decree. This argument is based on general principles of law analogous to those of 'res judicata.' But the earlier application cannot be said to have been heard or finally decided. It was dismissed for failure of the applicant (plaintiff respondent) to comply with the Court's order requiring her to furnish an affidavit. The Court did not proceed to decide the application on its merits.

Lastly, it is urged the plaintiff respondent was barred by her laches from filing this suit. But there is nothing to show she had reason to know of the interpolation before she filed the suit. So long as she received the monthly payments, she would

Malabar Law—Husband and wife belonging to different tarwads—Wife, whether entitled to "menchilavu" from husband's tarwad—Maintenance, past, whether can be decreed.

According to Malabar Law a wife who belongs to a tarwad different from that of her husband is not entitled to maintenance from her husband's tarwad, and, having no legal right to maintenance, she is not entitled to menchilavu, i.e., a luxurious form of maintenance. [p. 919, col. 1.]

A claim for compensation for menchilavu is on the same footing as a claim for past maintenance for which the Courts may give a decree. [p. 919, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, South Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 501 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Alatur, in Original Suit No. 314 of 1916.

FACTS.—Suit for menchilavu. The lower Appellate Court disallowed portion claimed on the ground that the wife's expenses were not such as can legitimately be claimed from the Tarwad of the husband.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Appellant.—The question is "whether an Anandravan, in claiming his maintenance, is entitled to include therein a reasonable amount towards the expenses of his wife." The right of the wife is by custom and by law: Parvathi v. Kamaran (1).

[PHILLIPS, J.—The wife has got similar rights in her own Tarwad. How can she be allowed to claim them again from her husband's Tarwad?]

The decisions lay down that even if a wife be maintained by her husband, she can claim maintenance from her own Tarwad. And it is the primary duty of the Tarwad to meet all the reasonable expenses of an Anandravan according to its means.

[NAPIER, J.—That duty does not extend to the wife of the Anandravan.]

Derivatively. For it is the primary duty of the husband to maintain his wife: Parvathi v. Kamaran (1) and Kelu Achen v. Lakshmi Nethyer Ammal (2).

The liability to pay is admitted as a matter of course in the written statement. The dispute is only as regards the amount.

Yes.

The practice of this family has been all along so. And the answer is that my unruly conduct bars my claim. That is not a denial of legal liability to pay. And the liability is admitted by the account-books.

The amount awarded is without any reference to the circumstances of the Tarwad.

Mr. C. V. Anantha Krishna Aiyar, for the Respondent, cited Moore's Malabar Law, pages 128-129. There is no authority for the proposition that the wife is entitled to be maintained out of her husband's Tarwad.

On the memorandum of objections.—A junior member who lives and is fed in the Tarwad house is not entitled to claim separate menchilavu. It is only if he goes out of the Tarwad that he can so claim. Kunhammatha v. Kunhi Kutti (3). The Karnavan is the person to purchase and pay for necessaries. The junior member cannot claim a separate allotment of money.

[PHILLIPS, J.—It is not that but a claim for the value of articles not supplied.]

Menchilavu is a part of maintenance and so cannot be claimed by a person who is maintained.

[Kalavoor Chembazhi Govindan Nayar v. Kunja Nair (4) was referred to by Mr. C. Madhavan Nair.]

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair in reply.

JUDGMENT.—Appellant's Counsel contends, that an Anandravan of a Malabar Tarwad is entitled to menchilavu not only for himself but also for his wife, who belongs to another Tarwad. Prima facie, a junior member of a Malabar Tarwad, whether male or female, must look to the Karnavan of his or her own Tarwad for maintenance. If, therefore, a woman, who can claim maintenance from her own Karnavan, is entitled also to claim maintenance from her husband's Tarwad, it gives her a right apparently opposed to the principles of Marumakathayam Law, and we have not been referred to any authority which recognises such a right except Parvathi v. Kamaran (1). That case is, however, no authority for any such proposition of law. This Court merely accepted a finding that such a custom existed in North Malabar, and this finding, based on the evidence of two witnesses, was not objected to. We are not, therefore, prepared to accept without authority this new proposition of law that a wife is entitled to maintenance from her husband's Tarwad, a proposition which even in Parvathi v. Kamaran (1) was described as inconsistent with the principles of Marumakathayam Law. If the wife has not a legal right to bare maintenance, a fortiori her claim to menchilavu, which may be termed a luxurious form of maintenance, must be negatived.

A memorandum of objections is filed for respondent, and it is contended that plaintiff is not entitled to any money allowance from the Karnavan and reliance is placed on Kunhammatha v. Kunhi Kutti (3). In this case, however, no money allowance is decreed, but only compensation for menchilavu not received in the past, to which plaintiff has been held to be entitled. This claim to menchilavu must be treated as on the same footing as a claim to past maintenance for which, undoubtedly, a decree could be given. Vide Kelu Achen v. Lakshmi Nethyar Ammal (2) and Kalavoor Chembazhi Govindan Nair v. Kunja Nayar (4).

The second appeal and memorandum of objections are both dismissed with costs.

JAI RAM—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Succession—Lameness, whether disqualification—Murder committed to hasten succession, effect of.

According to the Hindu law lameness which is congenital is a disqualification for purposes of succession. Lameness which is not complete, as where a person is able to move about with the assistance of crutches, is not a disqualification. [p. 920, col. 2.]

A person is not debarred from succeeding merely on the ground that a member of his family committed murder to hasten the succession, where the former was not a party to the murder and the benefit to him was not present in the mind of the murderer. [p. 920, cols 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated the 27th August 1917.

Mr. D. R. Sawney, for the Appellants.

Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Respondent.

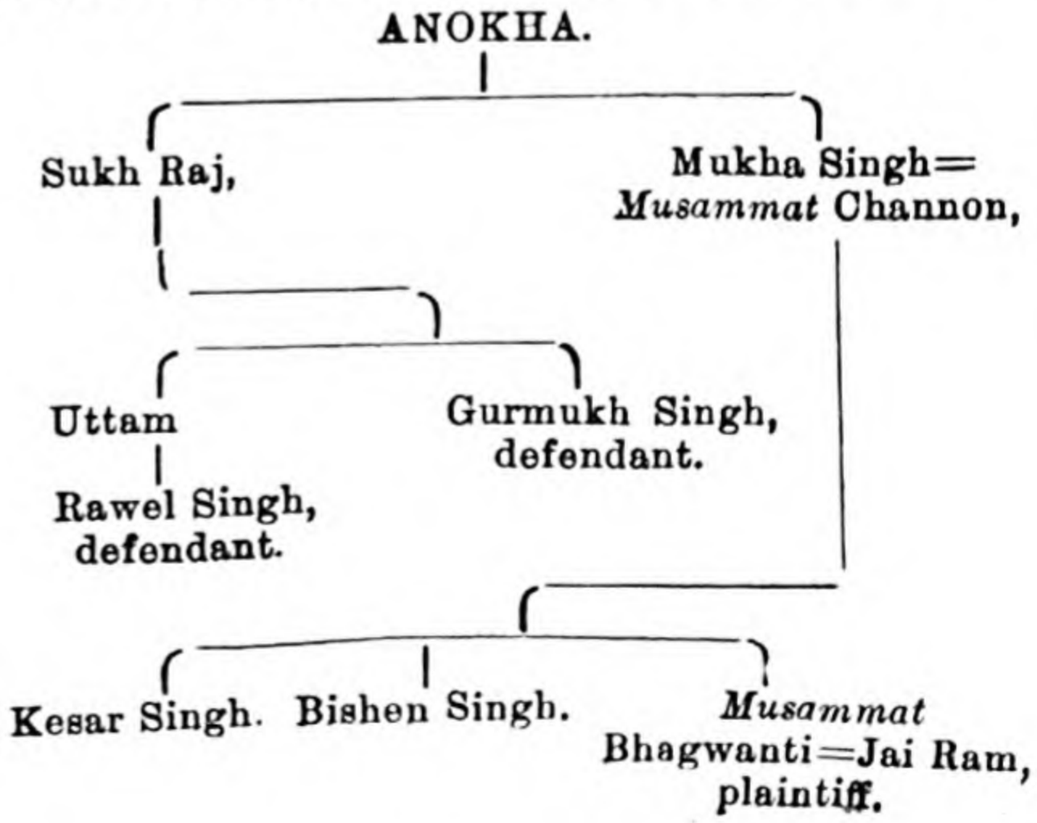
JUDGMENT.—The following is the pedigree-table of the parties in this case:—



In 1911 Kesar Singh, Bishen Singh and their mother Musammat Channon were murdered and Uttam Singh was convicted as their murderer and was hanged. Musammat Bhagwanti, the daughter of Musammat Channon, in the absence of her brothers succeeded to the property now in dispute and remained in its enjoyment until her death, which took place shortly before the institution of this suit whereupon the defendants, Gurmukh Singh and Rawel Singh, both minors, took possession of the property. The plaintiff, who is the husband of Musammat Bhagwanti deceased, claims the property. His suit was dismissed by the first Court, but the learned District Judge has decreed for him on the ground that Rawel Singh, being the son of the murderer, Uttam Singh, is disqualified from taking the succession, whilst Gurmukh Singh is also disqualified by the reason that he was a member of the joint Hindu family constituted by him and Uttam Singh and Rawel Singh and, therefore, cannot be allowed to benefit by the murder committed by a member of the family.

The parties are Hindu Khatris and admittedly are governed by the personal law, and even if the case of Rawel Singh fails, plaintiff, in order to achieve success, must show that Gurmukh Singh is disqualified. On behalf of the appellants it has been urged before us that under Hindu Law the son of a disqualified heir is not himself disqualified, and it is further pointed out that under Hindu Law a son has a right of succession independent of his father. But these are considerations which affect only the case of Rawel Singh and need not be discussed at this juncture, because if Gurmukh Singh has a good title, he would exclude the plaintiff. Now, at the time of the murder Gurmukh Singh was, and is, still a minor and no authority has been cited to us in support of the great extension of the principle "nemo ex suo delicto meliorem suam conditionem facere potest," on which the learned District Judge has based his rejection of Gurmukh Singh's claims. For the respondent, however, it is urged that Gurmukh Singh is disqualified to take the succession for another reason, and that is that he is congenitally lame. It is urged that in the plaint the plaintiff stated that Gurmukh Singh had been lame from birth and that this allegation was not specifically denied by the defendants, but having seen the pleas we find that the paragraph of the plaint referred to was generally denied and it was denied further that Gurmukh Singh was incapacitated according to Hindu Law from taking the succession. It is unnecessary for us to determine whether the lameness which disqualifies for succession according to Hindu Law must be a complete lameness. The provision is one which is repugnant to modern ideas of justice, but such authority as does exist on the subject requires that if lameness does disqualify an heir, it must be congenital. The finding of fact, however, is that Gurmukh Singh's lameness is not proved to be congenital, and this is a finding which cannot be challenged in second appeal. It is further found that the lameness is by no means complete, for with the assistance of crutches Gurmukh Singh attends school and is consequently not a hopelessly infirm creature. For these reasons we hold that Gurmukh Singh is not debarred by his lameness from taking the succession. It does so happen that he benefits by the murder committed by Uttam Singh, but he was certainly not a party to the murder and that the benefit to Gurmukh Singh was present to the mind of Uttam Singh at the time when he planned and committed the murder, is in the highest degree improbable.

For these reasons we accept the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

A. RAMA RAO—DEFENDANT No. 1—APPELLANT

MARTHA SEQUEIRA AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT No. 2—RESPONDENTS.

Madras District Municipalities Act (IV Mad. of 1884), ss 207, 64 (a), 278—Latrine erected and located with approval of Municipality—Nuisance—Right of private owner to sue for removal of nuisance—Decree for demolition of latrine, legality of—Compensation, award of, under s 278, whether bars other remedies—Permissive and obligatory duties of Corporations.

The erection of a latrine under the orders of a Municipality in a place approved by the latter does not render the owner immune from an action by a neighbouring owner or occupier for nuisance caused to him by the latrine. [p 923, col. 2; p. 924, col. 1.]

Though the Municipal Act has authorized the Council to direct the location of the latrine in a particular place, the work should not be carried out so as to injuriously affect private interests more than is necessary. [p. 923, col. 2.]

The power given to a Municipality to supervise the erection by a private individual of a latrine must be regarded as a permissive obligation which should be exercised without unnecessary detriment to private rights and without creating an unreasonable nuisance [p. 924, col. 1.]

The person complaining of the nuisance has a right of action to prevent the use of the building as a latrine, but no decree should be passed for the demolition of the building. [p. 922, col. 1.]

The provision in section 278 of the Madras District Municipalities Act for award of compensation by the Municipal Council for damage caused by the exercise of its powers does not interfere with the common law rights of injured parties. [p. 924, col 1.]

West v. Bristol Tramways Co, (1908) 2 K. B. 14; 77 L. J. K. B. 684; 99 L. T. 264; 72 J. P. 243; 6 L. G. R. 605; 24 T. L. R. 478, distinguished.

Permissive and obligatory duties of Corporations explained.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, South Kanara, in Appeal Suit No. 85 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Mangalore, in Original Suit No. 269 of 1914.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao (with him Mr. K. P. Lakshmana Rao), for the Appellant.—The latrine was erected under orders of the Municipality and its location was approved by the Municipality. The appellant would have laid himself open to prosecution if he had disobeyed the orders of the Municipal executive. For performance of a statutory obligation he cannot be sued at the instance of private owners as for a nuisance. The duty cast on the Municipality is obligatory.

There is a remedy provided in the District Municipalities Act in section 278 for wrongful exercise of its power by the Municipality. It is liable to pay compensation to any person who suffers damage by its act. No further remedy is open to the injured party.

In any event, the decree for demolition of the latrine is wrong. The 1st defendant is entitled to use it for any other purpose not interfering with the comfort or convenience of neighbours.

Mr. K. Ramanath Shenai, for the Respondents.—The fact that the Municipality approved of the nuisance will not destroy the common law rights of injured parties. If the latrine is a nuisance to the plaintiff, she has an undoubted right to ask for its mitigation or abatement. The powers of the Municipality should be reasonably exercised so as not to interfere with private rights Section 278 of the Act is not exhaustive of the remedies.

JUDGMENT.—(December 20, 1918.)—The 1st defendant and the plaintiff are neighbours. The former owns a large piece of land on which he has built cottages which he has let out for rent. For the convenience of the tenants he had put up a latrine in a particular place. This was objected to by the Municipal Council, who directed the demolition of it "and the construction of a proper and substantial one for the use of his tenants in the garden in an unobjectionable place about 25 yards to the west of the latrine complained of." (Vide Exhibit II.) The 1st defendant began to put up the latrine close to the house of the plaintiff. The site was approved of by the Municipal Chairman. The plaintiff complained against it and appealed to the Collector. The Collector passed orders stating that the site for the latrine was chosen by the Municipal Chairman after consulting both the parties and it could not be changed. This suit was brought for a mandatory injunction to remove the latrine as it is a nuisance to the plaintiff. In both the Courts below plaintiff was successful. They held that the statement in the order of the Collector that the Chairman consulted both the parties was wrong. They further held that the latrine was a nuisance. The District Munsif stated:—"The place is an abomination and it is an unmitigated nuisance to the plaintiff." The learned District Judge says:—"That the erection of the latrine opposite to and at a distance of only 25 yards from her house causes serious discomfort to, and is likely to endanger the health of the inmates of the plaintiff's house." In the lower Courts the decision was largely based upon Sayad Jafar Saheb v. Sayad Kadir Rahiman (1).

In second appeal Mr. Sitarama Rao has addressed to us a very able and elaborate argument on the question. His main contention was that under section 207 of the Municipal Act he was bound on the direction of the Municipal Council to put up a latrine, and that otherwise he would have rendered himself liable to be fined for his neglect, and that as he put up the latrine in the place approved of by the Municipal Council through its Chairman, no action lies against him. He also contended that the injunction to remove the building was wrong. Upon the latter question there can be no doubt. All that the plaintiff can complain against is the use of the building as a latrine, for that alone constitutes the nuisance. She has no right to object to the building itself, which can be utilised for other purposes which would not cause any nuisance nor injure the inmates of her house. She was not justified in coming to Court with a prayer for the removal of the building. To that extent the decree must be modified and as we understand that the walls have been pulled down, she should be directed to restore the building at her own expense. The more important question is whether the plaintiff has a right of suit under the circumstances mentioned.

Very recently we had to consider the liability of a Taluk Board for damages in the execution of a duty enjoined by the Legislature. Krishna Murthi Iyer v. Taluq Board of Mayavaram (2). We there pointed out that there is a well-marked distinction between permissive and obligatory duties; but as the question has been more fully argued on the present occasion, we think it desirable to state succinctly the rules and the limitations applicable to the two branches of duties. If the act is only permitted by the Statute to be done, the Corporation is practically under the same obligations to respect the rights of others as a private individual. The Corporation should so perform the duty as not to injure private rights. [See Attorney General v. Thames Conservators (3) and Madras Railway Company v. Zemindar of Carvetinagaram (4).] Further the duty must be done without negligence and with care. See Khagendra Nath Mittra v. Bhupendra Narayan Dutt (5). There is no distinction between misfeasance and non feasance in such cases. See Canadian Pacific Railway v. Parke (6). The position of a Corporation which is bound to carry out certain duties is different. In enjoining the performance of them the Legislature contemplates the fact that private individuals will have to submit to a certain amount of infraction of their rights. The principle is that where the Legislature directs a duty to be done, it must be deemed to have weighed the balance of convenience between public benefit and private rights and to have laid down that the latter should give way to the former. See Geddis v. Proprietors of Bann Reservoir (7), L. B. & S.C. Ry., Co. v. Truman (8), West v. Bristol Trammays Co. (9) and Westminster Corporation v. London and North Western Ry. (10). But the private individual is not altogether without remedy even in such cases. If the work has been done negligently or carelessly the Corporation will be liable. See Hammersmith & Ry. Co. v. Brand (11) and Thompson v. Eccles Corporation (12). The Corporation will also be liable where it acts maliciously and with a wanton desire to injure private rights. But it is not liable for mere non feasance. The question now is under which of the two categories we should place the erection by the 1st defendant of the latrine ordered by the Municipality. Section 207 runs "The Municipal Council may by a notice require, etc." Mr. Sitarama Rao drew our attention to section 264 (a), which contains the penal clause. He also referred to section 35, which enables the Governor in Council to suspend the operations of the resolutions passed under the Act if the execution of such resolutions is likely to cause obstruction, injury or annoyance to any person lawfully employed or danger to human life, health, or safety. The learned Vakil argued from these provisions that the duty cast upon the Municipality must be regarded as obligatory. We are unable to agree with him. Prima facie the provision of a latrine is for the convenience of the inmates of the place, and has no doubt a bearing on the health of the town. But a direction to build at a particular place without reference to the surroundings cannot be said to be obligatory on the Municipality. Under very similar circumstances it was held in Vernon v. Vestry of St. James, Westminster (13), to which Mr. Shenai drew our attention, that the Corporation would be liable in damages to a private individual. In that case Malins, V. C., stated:—"Therefore, I repeat, if the question before me were simply whether they were right in selecting the place, and whether one place or another was better, I should be bound to decide that the vestry are the sole Judges as to what the situation should be. But great as the powers of the vestries under the Act are, they are not absolute, and vestries are, like all other public bodies, liable to be controlled by this Court, if they proceed to exercise their powers in an unreasonable manner, whether they are induced to do so by improper motives or from error of judgment." Further on the V. C. says: "It is clear that the Court has power to entertain such suits, and that these vestries must not execute these powers in such a manner as to create a nuisance when the object of the Act is to remove nuisances." The case was taken up to the Court of Appeal. Lord Justice James said:—"If the erection in question were made by a private landowner on his own soil and freehold, it would seem to be beyond all question a nuisance so grave and so serious that the neighbours would be entitled to apply to the Court for an injunction to restrain it. The question is whether the fact that the thing is done, not by a private owner on his private soil, but by the parish vestry on a place that is said to be a public highway, makes any difference." The learned Lord Justice then quoted section 6, which is very similar to section 207 of the District Municipalities Act and proceeded:—"Prima facie nobody is authorized to commit a nuisance and nobody is to be held so authorized under an Act of Parliament unless it appears from express words or by necessary implication that the act was to be done or might be done notwithstanding its tending to the creation of a nuisance." Lord Justice Cotton said:—"Therefore the mere fact that an urinal is authorized to be erected does not necessarily or by necessary implication give parliamentary power to do it if it is a nuisance." Lord Justice Lush said:—"That if the inconvenience is only to the public and there is no special injury to a particular individual no action would lie." This case is strong authority for the position that although the Municipal Act has authorized the Council to direct the location of latrine in a particular place, the work should not be carried out so as to affect injuriously private interests more than is necessary. In Sellors v. Matlock Bath Local Board (14) the same principle was enunciated. In Rapier

v. London Tramways Company (15) also this principle was affirmed. It seems to us, therefore, that in the contemplation of the Legislature the power given to the Municipality to supervise the erection by a private individual of a latrine must be regarded as a permissive obligation which should be exercised without unnecessary detriment to private rights and without creating unreasonable nuisance. The evidence of the Medical Officer is to the effect that all latrines in Mangalore are to a certain extent a nuisance. This being so, their erection must be detrimental to some private right.

The learned Vakil for the appellant further relied upon the fact that by section 278 of the Act, compensation is payable by the Municipal Council for any damage caused by the exercise of its powers and hence the plaintiff is not entitled to any further remedy from the defendant in this suit. In the case already referred to, namely, Vernon v. Vestry of St. James, Westminster (13), Lord Justice James referred to the clause which provided for compensation and held that the plaintiff was not confined to that remedy alone. In Attorney-General v. Lewes Corporation (16) it was held that none of the provisions relating to remedies in the Act would interfere with the common law rights of injured parties We do not think the decision in West v. Bristol Tramways Co. (9) is any authority for the proposition contended for by the learned Vakil for the appellant.

Moreover, this is not a suit against the Corporation for any injunction or for damages, although the Municipal Council has been impleaded as a defendant. The suit is primarily against the 1st defendant for what he has done on his premises. It would be unreasonable to expect that the Municipal Act should provide for reliefs as against private individuals.

We are, therefore, of opinion that there is no substance in this contention. In the result our conclusion is that the direction to pull down the whole building was wrong and that there should be an enquiry as to whether the defendant could have located the latrine in such a place as no to cause unreasonable injury to the plaintiff. Even should the defendant be obliged to remove some of the cottages in order that a convenient place may be found for erecting a latrine without causing inconvenience to the plaintiff, he should be required to do so. Therefore we must ask the District Judge to return a finding on the following issue:—

Was the latrine erected by the defendant in a reasonable manner so as not to infringe unnecessarily the rights of plaintiff?

Six weeks for finding and seven days for objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the Distict Judge of South Kanara submitted the following

FINDING.—I have been directed to return a finding on the evidence on record on the following issue, viz.:—

The District Munsif and this Court found that the latrine was a nuisance, and that the allegation that the latrine was built on the plaint site with the consent of the parties had not been substantiated. There cannot, I think, be any doubt, nor is this seriously disputed, that the defendant could have located the latrine in such a place as not to cause unnecessary injury to the plaintiff. The defendant's garden is, as I pointed out in paragraph 4 of my judgment, an extensive one, and it is difficult to believe that an unobjectionable site could not be found. The location of the latrine within 25 yards of plaintiff's house was clearly unjustifiable. It may, however, have been due to a mistake on the defendant's part, and it is possible that he was under the impression that the site in question had been approved of by the Municipal Council. At the request of the parties I inspected the plaint locality in the presence of the Vakils for plaintiff and defendant, and the result of the inspection was to confirm the opinion I expressed that an unobjectionable site in another part of the garden could have been found. The defendant is prepared to erect the latrine at any place that may be approved of by the Municipal Council. The question of the selection of the site may, I think, be left to be determined by the Municipal Chairman. I would accordingly return a finding that the latrine was not erected by the defendant in a reasonable manner so as not to unnecessarily infringe the rights of plaintiff.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—We accept the finding and subject to the modification indicated in our remand order, the second appeal is dismissed. Each party to bear his own costs throughout.

Post Office Act (VI of 1898), s. 44 (1)—Post Office Rules, r. 94—Provident Funds Act (IX of 1897), s. 4—Money remitted through Post Office, whether belongs to remitter or payee—Provident Fund remitted through Post Office, whether can be attached in execution of decree against payee.

Money remitted by money-order through the Post Office does not cease to be the property of the remitter until it is actually paid to the remittee. Therefore, money standing to the credit of a person in the Railway Provident Institution as a compulsory deposit does not lose its character as such by the mere fact of its being remitted by money-order to the depositor, and it retains that character until it is actually delivered to the depositor.

Mr. Woodham, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Munshi, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—The only question in this case is whether a money order in course of transmission by the postal authorities is held by them as the servant of the remitter or whether the remitter has parted with his property and they hold as agent of the payee.

Mr. Munshi, who has argued his case very frankly, admitted that if the Post Office was a servant of the remitter, then the remitter could not be said to have parted with the money. Under rule 94 of the Post Office Rules to be found at page 750 of Part I, Gazette of India, for 8th August 1903, it is provided that the remitter of a money order which has not been paid may stop payment and require that the money be paid to himself. This is to be done without any additional charge, on the remitter applying in writing to the Post Office at which the money order issued and producing the receipt and giving full particulars of the payee's address as entered in the money order, and the rule goes on to prove that, in no case shall the Post Office be responsible for inability or failure to stop payment in compliance with the remitter's request. I can only read these rules as meaning that the Post Office as regards money orders is placed at the orders of the remitter. I do not think, therefore, that the property of the remitter in money remitted by money order ceases until it is actually paid to the remittee. The sum in question was, as Mr. Munshi admitted, a compulsory deposit in the hands of the remitter and if it was such, he acknowledged that it was not liable to attachment. I must hold that the money till paid over was still under the control and dominion of the remitter. It follows, therefore, that it still retained the character of a compulsory deposit and was not liable to attachment. Under these circumstances it seems to me that the remitter, as indeed Mr. Munshi again acknowledged, was the proper person to bring this suit. He is the Manager of the Railway Fund who has obtained leave to sue on behalf of the general body of members. The declaration, therefore, must be given as prayed with costs.

Order accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 19—Appeal, dismissal of, for default—Application for restoration, whether can be summarily dismissed—Procedure.

An application under Order XLI, rule 19, Civil Procedure Code, praying for the restoration of an appeal dismissed in default, ought not to be rejected summarily without affording the applicant an opportunity of establishing the allegations made in his application, and without considering whether there was good cause for his absence on the date fixed.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 14th August 191-, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Delhi, dated the 20th May 1918, dismissing the plaintiff's claim.

Lala Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order refusing to set aside an order dismissing an appeal for default of appearance on the part of the appellant. The appeal was fixed for hearing for the 14th August 1916. During the early part of the day it was called for hearing when neither appellant nor his Counsel was present to prosecute it. The learned Judge of the Court below dismissed it for default of appearance.

On the 21st of August 1918, an application was made in accordance with rule 19, Order XLI, Civil Procedure Code, praying for the restoration of the appeal to its original number. In the application it was stated that the applicant could not appear on account of his illness, that he had sent his mukhtar to look after the case but as he could not find the Pleader to attend to the appeal, it was dismissed for default of prosecution. It was further stated that the Counsel was actually brought to the Court of the learned District Judge later on, but it was discovered that the appeal had already been disposed of and the record consigned to the record room. The application was summarily rejected by the learned Judge, who remarked that as there was no medical certificate filed and as there was no reason why the applicant's Counsel should not have been present, sufficient cause had not been shown for the restoration of the appeal. That is not what is contemplated by the law. The learned Judge ought to have taken into consideration the allegations upon which the application was made and ought to have come to the conclusion whether there was good cause for the absence of the applicant on the date fixed. There appears to be no material upon the record upon which it may be possible for this Court to form an opinion. The proper course for the learned Judge would have been to have called upon the applicant to establish the allegation made in his application. If the appellant was unable to prove by evidence the allegations made in the application, the learned Judge would have been entitled to refuse his application but there appears to be no indication in his judgment that he gave any opportunity to the applicant to establish the ground set forth in his application. In my opinion an opportunity should be given to the petitioner to show by evidence whether he was unable to appear on the date fixed for the hearing of the appeal.

I set aside the order rejecting the application for restoration and send the case back to the lower Appellate Court, in order that the Court may give the appellant an opportunity to produce such evidence as he wishes to produce. If in the opinion of the learned Judge after considering the evidence it is necessary to hear the opposite party, notice may be issued to him to show cause why the application should not be allowed. Costs will abide the result.

Appeal accepted; Case remanded.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 6 (a)—Buddhist Law, Burmese—Chance of succession, transfer of, validity of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 3, O. II, r. 3—Joinder of parties and causes of action, when permissible.

Where the succession to an estate is governed by the Burmese Buddhist Law, an heir-apparent is precluded by the provisions of section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act from transferring his chance of succeeding. [p. 927, col. 2.]

Where different portions of an estate are in the possession of different persons, each of whose interests is opposed to that of the others, except where they are joint, a person interested in the estate suing for his share therein cannot join all the persons in possession as defendants in one suit, unless they are in possession in virtue of the same transaction or the same series of transactions within the meaning of rule 3 of Order I of the Civil Procedure Code, nor can he, by virtue of rule 3 of Order II of the Code, join in the same suit several causes of action against the several parties in possession, unless they are all jointly interested in each separate cause of action. [p. 928, col. 1.]

Mr. B. Cowasji, for the Plaintiffs.

Messrs. Lentaigne, N. M. Cowasji and Maung Thin, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit brought by Mr. W. Dhar, a Barrister at-Law, claiming a share as heir of his deceased wife, a daughter of the deceased U Htoon Myat, who predeceased her.

It is contended by the defendants inter alia that she released her interest in her father's estate in consideration of a sum of Rs. 25,000 by a deed, dated the 12th February 1914, and the plaintiff replies inter alia that the deed is of no binding effect under section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, which provides that the chance of an heir-apparent succeeding to an estate, or any other mere possibility of a like nature cannot be transferred. The defendants retort that the deed is not a transfer, but merely a surrender or release, and that the provision does not extend to Buddhists by reason of section 2 (d) of the same Act, which provides that nothing in the section shall affect any rule of Hindu, Muhammadan or Buddhist Law. For the purposes of the argument it is assumed that none of the other objections taken to the deed are of any validity.

A very similar case arose in Bombay amongst Muhammadans in 1906 in Sumsuddin v. Abdul Husein (1), where one Fatmaboo claimed that a release in favour, as in the present case, of her father was not binding on her: a contention that was upheld be Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C.J., and Beaman, J., who held that her chance of succession was neither transferable nor releasable, relying for the latter proposition on the dictum of Lord Davey in Sham Sundar Lal v. Achhan Kunwar (2) that a Hindu reversioner could neither transfer nor bind his chance of succession. The same view was expressed by the High Court of Madras in Meerangani Rowther v. K. Nagur Meera (3) and by the Calcutta High Court in Rebati Mohan Das v. Ahmed Khan (4) and the Allahabad High Court in Fayazul Rahman v. Muhammad Usman (5). In Mohammad Hashmat Ali v. Kaniz Fatima (6) it was held that although by reason of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act it was impossible for any person to transfer the chance of becoming entitled to a share in the property of a living person, there was nothing illegal in a person for good consideration contracting not to claim in the event of his becoming entitled on the decease of a living person. The distinction seems rather subtle, and none of the above or any other authorities seem to have been cited. To me it seems an evasion of the section and I prefer to follow the former authorities rather than this, unless there is anything in Buddhist Law to show that section 6 does not apply, Counsel were unable to quote any text of Buddhist Law to show that it did not apply. Certain decisions were quoted in which Judges have upheld such agreements, but in none was any reference made to the provisions of this section.

It was argued that a Muhammadan could not be disinherited, while a Burman's right to a share depended on his conduct; but I cannot see that this makes any difference. If an heir-apparent's chance which can only be defeated by his death is a spes successionis, a fortiori is the chance of a Burman which depends on other contingencies.

The deed of release, I would, therefore, hold, does not prevent Mr. Dhar from having an interest in the estate. The further questions whether his claim to have the document declared void or voidable is barred by limitation, and whether he is bound to make restitution have not been argued and decisions on these points must be reserved. Both defendants have, however, claimed that the suit as framed is bad for misjoinder. Only the 5th defendant took the point in her written statement. But the other defendants joined in the objection, and Mr. Cowasji for the plaintiff accepted the position.

In my opinion the suit as framed is hopelessly bad. If it were to stand, I can see no reason why in an administration suit a plaintiff should not sue all the debtors to an estate. If one looks at the precedents of Pleadings Nos. 41, 42, 43 of Appendix A, or the precedent of an Administration Decree No. 17 of Appendix D to the Civil Procedure Code, it is clear that the suit as framed is far wider than is contemplated by these precedents.

Order I, rule 3, allows all persons to be joined as defendants against whom any right to relief is claimed in respect of the same transaction or series of transactions. Here the plaintiff claims that all the defendants are in wrongful possession of portions of the estate of the deceased, but no nexus is shown to exist, showing that they were in possession by virtue of the same transactions or series of transactions.

The plaintiff has a cause of action against each defendant, but so far from all being jointly interested, the interest of each defendant is opposed to that of the others, except where and in so far as the conveyances are joint—a matter upon which the plaint throws no light. There is, therefore, a misjoinder of parties and causes of action under Order II, rule 3. It may be that all the defendants are interested in the questions whether the plaintiff has a right to sue, whether the right is barred, and whether he can sue without restitution. But further than this the plaintiff cannot go in this suit in my opinion.

If these questions are settled in his favour, he will be entitled to the ordinary administration decree with the ordinary enquiries and these may and presumably will result in further suits against the present defendants severally or in some cases against more than one jointly. But the present plaint, which tries to consolidate all these into one, is in my opinion bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action, and must be returned for amendment.

Plaint returned.

MA SEIN U—APPELLANT

TUN BA—RESPONDENT.

Buddhist Law, Burmese—Succession—Death of husband or wife, childless—Survivor, rights of.

According to Burmese Buddhist Law, on the death of a husband or wife without children, the survivor succeeds to the whole of the deceased spouse's estate, including the right of the deceased to a share in undivided ancestral property.

Mr. Judge, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ginwala, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only point for decision in this appeal is whether the husband is entitled to his deceased wife's share in the undivided estate of her parents. Prima facie there would seem to be no reason why a share in an undivided estate should not be heritable.

Mr. Judge for the appellant relies on Mi Pyu v. Mi Bon Dok (1) as an authority for the view that the husband cannot inherit the wife's share in undivided ancestral property. The effect of this ruling is discussed in Mi Lan v. Maung Shwe Daing (2), and it is clear that the Judicial Commissioner of Lower Burma did not intend to lay down the general rule that the widow as representative of her deceased husband cannot inherit his share in an undivided estate, but limited its application to cases in which the brothers and sisters are living together in commensality and managing the family property jointly. It seems very doubtful whether at the present day the wife's or husband's right to inherit the deceased spouse's share in an undivided family estate would be limited even to this extent.

(1) L. B. R. (1872—1892) 35.
(2) U. B. R. (1892-96) II, 121.

After a very full consideration of the authorities Burges, J. C., came to the conclusion in Mi Lan v. Maung Shwe Daing (2) that the only restriction to the general rule of inheritance by husband or wife from one another relates to impartible immoveable property, the succession to which is governed by special rules. This ruling was followed in Maung Waik v. Maung Nyein (3) and the principle was enunciated as follows: "On the death of a husband or wife without children, the survivor succeeds to the whole of the deceased's estate, including the right of the deceased to a share in undivided ancestral property."

I have no doubt that this is a correct statement of the law on the subject, and that it is in accordance with the practice prevailing in Lower Burma at the present day. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Cause of action, meaning of.

A cause of action has no relation to the defence set up by the defendant, nor does it depend on the character of the relief prayed for by the plaintiff. It refers entirely to the grounds set forth in the plaint as the cause of action, or, in other words, to the media upon which the plaintiff asks the Court to arrive at a conclusion in his favour. [p. 930, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Burdwan, dated the 23rd August 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at that place, dated the 11th September 1916.

RANGLAL v. S. T. M. CHETIY.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen, for the Appellants.—The plaintiffs are appellants here. This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession and declaration of title to a plot of land.

The first Court was right in coming to the conclusion that there was a cause of action and the Appellate Court was wrong in coming to a contrary finding.

Here the cause of action arose from the date of cutting the khal, i.e., in Sravan 1322 B. S. There is a cause of action and he does not deny my title and says that he takes water from it.

Babu Ram Chandra Majumdar (with him Babu Fanindra Kumar Guha), for the Respondents.—The cause of action as alleged in the plaint arose on the cutting of the khal and the media was dispossession. But the khal was cut by some other person.

Cause of action must depend on the allegation in the plaint as has been held by the Judicial Committee: Chand Kour v. Partab Singh (1).

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession, on declaration of the plaintiffs' title to a piece of land measuring 18 cottas. Out of this 18 cottas, the plaintiffs claimed khas possession of 16 cottas and possession through tenants of the remaining 2 cottas. The Munsif decreed the suit in part and the lower Appellate Court has dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs had no cause of action. In our opinion the learned Subordinate Judge is perfectly right. The cause of action as set out in the plaint arose on the cutting of a khal on the 7th Sravan 1322. It is found that the khal in question was not cut on the 7th Sravan 1322 but was cut long ago in the year 1892, and also that it was not cut by the defendants. It is contended on behalf of the appellants, and apparently was so found by the Munsif, that the denial of the plaintiffs' title in the written statement and the defendants' allegation that they had a right of easement gave the plaintiffs a cause of action. The statement made by the defendants in the written statement cannot in itself give a cause of action. In this connection it is sufficient to refer to the remarks of the Judicial Committee in the case of Chand Kour v. Partab Singh (1): "Now the cause of action has no relation whatever to the defence which may be set up by the defendant, nor does it depend on the character of the relief prayed for by the plaintiff. It refers entirely to the grounds set forth in the plaint as the cause of action, or in other words, to the media upon which the plaintiff asks the Court to arrive at a conclusion in his favour." Here the ground set forth in the plaint for giving the cause of action was the cutting of the khal and as it entirely fails, it must be held that the plaintiffs have failed to show that they had any cause of action which would justify their bringing this suit.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

S. T. M. CHETTY—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXVIII, r. 5—Attachment before judgment—Security furnished—Property not returned to surety—Surety, whether liable for decree.

Where property attached before judgment is released on security being furnished but the surety is not placed in possession of the property, he cannot be proceeded against in the event of a decree being passed against the defendant. [p. 931, col. 1.]

Mr. Campagnac, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. C. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In Civil Regular No. 748 of 1918 in the Small Causes Court, Rangoon, the plaintiff Karuppen Chetty attached property before judgment. One Ranglal came forward on behalf of the defendants Natha Singh and Suran Singh and applied for removal of attachment on his furnishing security.

On the 7th February Ranglal executed a bond in which he undertook, in case the attachment before judgment should be ordered to be continued, to pay Rs. 1,169-12 0 or to produce the three carts, eleven bullocks and two cows attached. On the same date and before the properties attached had left the custody of the bailiff of the Court, the plaintiff in a second suit against the same defendants (No. 581 of 1918) applied for attachment before judgment of the same properties and an order was issued to the bailiff directing him to hold the property pending orders of the Court.

Subsequently one Kaliha came forward by arrangement with plaintiff and was accepted as surety for payment of the decree and the removal of the attachment was ordered. The property attached was made over to Kaliha. Since then it has disappeared, and it is not necessary for the purpose of this appeal to attempt to follow it. The plaintiff obtained his decree in Suit No. 748 and proceeded to execute it against the surety Ranglal.

On the 9th March 1918, Ranglal filed a petition asking that the bond be cancelled on the ground that although the release of the property from attachment on his furnishing security was ordered, he had never got possession and that defendants in collusion with plaintiff had sold the property to a third party. The Court rejected the application, holding that the bond was still binding on the petitioner. Against this order Ranglal has appealed.

On the admitted facts I am of opinion that the bond cannot be held to be binding on the appellant. It is quite clear that the condition on which appellant executed the bond was that the property should be released from attachment. This is clear from the application of the first defendant, and the Court ordered that the property be released if the security offered was sufficient. It seems also clear that the first attachment was not in fact removed immediately and that the plaintiff did not intend that it should be. In the affidavit accompanying his application of the 7th February in consequence of which the attachment in Suit No. 581 was issued, the Chetty says in so many words, if the attached properties are released they will be disposed of there and then, which shows that his object was to prevent the release of the property from attachment. It is obvious that when appellant executed the security bond, he had a right to expect that the attachment would be removed forthwith. The Chetty not merely prevented the property leaving the Court at the time, but subsequently withdrew his second attachment and allowed the property to be made over to the surety in the other suit. By his own conduct he made it impossible for the surety (the appellant) to comply with his alternative undertaking to produce the property in case the attachment should be ordered to be continued.

It is true that the appellant undertook to pay the decretal amount into Court in the alternative, but it is clear that he only expected this alternative to be enforced on failure to comply with his undertaking to produce the property, if ordered to do so.

The essential part of his undertaking was to be responsible for the production of the property as a consideration for the removal of the attachment. Under these circumstances the plaintiff was himself responsible for the appellant's inability to perform his part of the agreement and I cannot now hold him to the strict letter of his bond. It would not be just or equitable to allow the plaintiff to execute the decree against the surety. The application is allowed with costs, Advocates' fees have by consent been fixed at two gold mohurs. The money paid by the applicant must be refunded.

Application allowed.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Manager, whether can sue in his own name as representing family—Mortgage by manager and junior member of family—Redemption, suit for, by manager alone, maintainability of—Civil Procedure Code (act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 1.

The father or managing member of a Hindu family is not legally incapacitated from solely representing the family in a suit, by the fact that the transaction out of which the litigation arises is embodied in a deed in which a junior member of the undivided family had joined as obligee or obligor. The addition of the name of a junior member is sometimes made to avoid disputes in future but it does not make the document legally more valid than if it had been executed by the managing member alone. In the case of a mortgage executed by the managing member and a junior member of the family, the former is entitled to redeem in his own name. [p. 932, col. 2; p. 933, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Trichinopoly, in Appeal Suit No. 59 of 1918 (Appeal Suit No. 387 of 1917, District Court, Trichinopoly), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Namakkal, in Original Suit No. 37 of 1913.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar (with him Mr. N. Rajagopalachariar), for the Appellant.—The suit was not maintainable by the father alone. He executed the document for himself and as guardian of a minor son, who was a major at date of suit. The son should also have joined as plaintiff. The father is not competent to represent the family in the litigation.

As the father had no right to sue in his own name, the suit is barred.

Mr. T. V. Venkatarama Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The father's right to represent the joint family in the suit is not affected by the fact that the mortgage was executed by another member also. It would be anomalous if, while he could represent the family in other transactions, a special disability should attach in enforcing rights under a document to which another coparcener was a party. The addition of other members is often at the instance of the creditor and to ensure freedom from unnecessary litigation. Section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act cannot have the effect of preventing the manager from suing for the family.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I am unable to agree with the contention of Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar that the father or managing member of a Hindu family loses his capacity to solely represent the family in a suit, if the transaction out of which the litigation arose was embodied in a deed in which a junior member of the undivided family had joined with the managing member as obligor or obligee. The addition of the name of a junior member is sometimes made in a document for the avoidance of dispute in future with the person whose name is so added where the added name is that of an adult, and for the perpetuation of testimony that the act is done by the manager as such where the added name is that of a minor represented by the manager as guardian. Such addition does not make the document legally more valid than if it had been executed by the managing member alone for purposes binding on the family, whether he describes himself as manager or not in the document. I am unable to see how an unnecessary addition of a name by the manager of his own accord or at the instance of the other party to the document, and which does not affect the legal validity of the document, can result in creating a legal disability in the manager to represent thereafter the family in litigations connected with that transaction, while retaining his full capacity so to represent the family by his sole name in all other litigations and transactions. Section 85 of Act IV of 1882 was not, in my opinion, intended to affect the right of a managing member to bring a suit in his sole name on behalf of the family, and from Sedheshuri Pershad Narain Singh v. Dharamjit Narain Singh (1), which seems to lay down a different rule, I respectfully dissent. The contention as to limitation based on such alleged disability, therefore, fails.

The only other question is whether the award of interest to plaintiff at 9 per cent. per annum throughout is appropriate. I think that while the award of such interest on the purchase-money (Rs. 2,700) till the date of payment of the Rs. 3,000 by the defendant is not excessive, interest might be safely reduced to 6 per cent. on the balance of Rs. 401-4-0 (then remaining due) for the subsequent period till date of suit; calculating at such reduced rate, the amount due to plaintiff on date of suit is diminished by Rs. 108-5-0.

I would modify the lower Appellate Court's decree accordingly. I would also in the matter of costs allow only two-thirds of the costs incurred in all Courts to the plaintiff, the defendant bearing his own costs throughout. Three months' time from this date is granted for redemption.

NAPIER, J.—I am quite clear that where a father executes a mortgage in circumstances that will bind his minor sons and would entitle him to bring a suit to redeem in his own name, the fact that he chooses to execute also qua guardian does not disentitle him to bring such suit by himself after the minor has come of age, vide Adaikulam Chetti v. Subban Chetti (2), but I express no opinion on the question whether if a major son had joined in the mortgage he would not have been a necessary party. I agree in the decree proposed by my learned brother.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. P. Tiwari, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Punaji Jamadar at his death left two widows of his son Shaikh Ratan, Musammat Amirbi the present plaintiff and Musammat Issubi. Shaikh Ratan had predeceased his father but had left three sons Hassu, Raju (defendant No. 2) and Fathu. By a registered deed, dated the 20th September 1893, Musammat Issubi, acting on behalf of her sons Raju and Fathu, sold two houses situated at Raipur to her co-widow, the plaintiff, for Rs. 150. On the 28th of June 1915 Raju mortgaged a third share of this property to the 1st defendant Shaikh Khaja Miya, and the latter sued on his mortgage, obtaining a preliminary decree for sale on the 21st July 1916. Plaintiff, who fears that the decree will affect her, sued for a declaration that she is the absolute owner of the two houses in suit, that Raju had no right to mortgage them and that the decree dated the 21st July 1916 is void as against her. There was some doubt as to whether the houses in suit were the houses sold, but the trial Court found that the houses in suit were built by the plaintiff on the site of the kotha transferred by the document of 1893, and that finding was apparently not questioned before the lower Appellate Court. Both Courts find that Musammat Issubi did execute the sale-deed for the two minors receiving consideration therefor. Further that the sale was for necessity and for the benefit of the minors, the houses being sold to pay off Punaji, the grandfather's debts. It was also found that Issubi was the de facto guardian of the minors. Both Courts on the authority of Husen v. Rajaram (1) found the sale void ab initio and have on this ground dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

(1) 26 Ind. Cas. 813; 10 N. L. R. 133,

N. K. M. M. CHETTY v. LUTCHMAN CHETTY.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (2) held:

"That a de facto guardian has no power to convey to another any right or interest in immoveable property which the transferee can enforce against the infant: nor can any such transferee, if let into possession of the property under such unauthorised transfer, resist an action in ejectment on behalf of the infant as a trespasser. It follows that being himself without title, he cannot seek to recover property in the possession of another equally without title."

The transfer in the present case being, therefore, absolutely void, the lower Courts are right in holding that the plaintiff cannot obtain the declaration she seeks for on the ground of her having bought the property in suit.

It is, however, here contended for her that she should be allowed to prove her title by adverse possession. It is argued that since 1893 she has been in adverse possession of the house in suit. After she had bought them she built two houses on the site of the kotha she purchased, proceedings which show that she set up a definite title to the site acquired.

It is contended on the authority of Nallamuttu Pillai v. Betha Naickan (3) that the 1st defendant's decree can be defeated by the plaintiff's possession for a period exceeding 12 years prior to the institution of the suit; for plaintiff's claim is inconsistent with the rights of both the mortgagee and the mortgagor. There seems to be a conflict of authority on this point. Nandan Singh v. Jumman (4) deals with the case of a trespasser ousting a mortgagor under a simple mortgage, and it is obvious that in such a case adverse possession cannot extinguish the rights of the mortgagee but even then if adverse possession precedes a simple mortgage, it will run against the mortgagor and the mortgagee both. Budankayala Ballakrishnamma Subudhi v. Vinayaka Rava Bisoyi (5) and Parthasarathi Naikan v. Lakshmana Naicken (6) are authorities for holding that the interest in immoveable property which is acquired by adverse possession, can only be that interest which the person entitled to immediate possession had at the time that adverse possession began. In the present case it seems to me that plaintiff is entitled to show that she had adverse possession of the property in suit against the rightful owners from the time she took possession of the property, namely, in 1893. That case, however, has not been tried. Pleadings will have to be taken and issues framed. It is contended for the respondents that as ownership by prescription was not advanced by the plaintiff, she should be made liable for costs in both Courts. I do not think so. The pronouncement by the Privy Council of the effect of a transfer by the de facto guardian of a Muhammadan minor was made after the case was concluded in the lower Appellate Court. Had the suit been brought after the views of their Lordships of the Privy Council on this point were known, doubtless the present plaint would have contained a prayer that plaintiff claimed to be owner by prescription, and as such her claim be decreed. I set aside the decree dismissing the suit and remand the case to the first Court for a retrial with advertence to the above remarks. Refund certificate will issue and other costs will abide the result.

Case remanded.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s 14—Insolvency proceedings—Creditor proving debt—Annulment of insolvency—Suit to recover debt—Limitation—Exclusion of time spent in proving debt in insolvency.

A creditor who files a proof of his debt before the Official Assignee, prosecutes a civil proceeding within the meaning of section 14 of the Limitation Act, and is entitled to deduct the period during which he was so engaged in filing a suit to recover his debt on the insolvency being annulled.

Messrs. N. M. Cowasji and Mani, for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. S. N. Sen, Shaw and Chari, for the Defendants.

ORDER.—It being admitted in this case that the suit is barred unless the plaintiff is entitled to exclude the period during which he was engaged in proving his claim against the defendant firm in an insolvency which was subsequently annulled, the question is raised as a preliminary issue. The plaintiff relied both on sections 14 and 15 of the Limitation Act, urging with regard to the latter section that section 17 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act operated as a statutory injunction or order. This seems to me rather a novel contention, unsustainable if for no other reason than that the plaintiff never attempted to get the requisite permission of the Court. The case differs from that of Wazir v. Mahomed Imam (1) in that section 29 of the Punjab Act IV of 1872 contains an absolute prohibition. Section 17 of the Insolvency Act, on the other hand, merely orders any person who wishes to sue an insolvent to obtain the Court's permission as a condition precedent. Section 14 of the Limitation Act seems to me more applicable. A creditor who files a proof of his debt before the Official Assignee seems to me to be prosecuting a proceeding which is certainly a civil proceeding within the meaning of the section where, as I read it, civil proceeding is used as opposed to criminal proceeding.

The fact that he has to prove his debt before the Official Assignee in the first instance does not prevent its being a proceeding in the Insolvency Court. If it is not a proceeding in the Insolvency Court, I do not know what it is. The section does not say "before a Court of first instance or before a Court of Appeal," but "in a Court of first instance or in a Court of Appeal," and when we read as we do in section 46 and the following sections what debts are "provable in insolvency," it seems to me impossible to contend that a person trying to prove his debt and obtain his due share thereof "in insolvency" is not prosecuting a proceeding in the Insolvency Court, just because in the first instance he appears only before an officer of that Court.

With regard to the allegation that the plaintiff was not prosecuting it with due diligence, the facts are that the order of adjudication was made on the 6th June 1913 and that the claim was sent in a couple of months later, no further steps were taken, but Counsel who filed the claim states that the acting Official Assignee informed him when he did so that steps were to be taken to annul the adjudication, and the adjudication was annulled some six months later. It was a very heavy insolvency, and there was not much to be gained by creditors rushing in with their proofs, especially as those would be waste paper if the insolvency was annulled. There is no evidence that the Official Assignee in any way pressed him to prove his claim, and for my own part I think that under the circumstances of the case the plaintiff acted wisely in not incurring costs by doing so. Nor do I think that it was in any way incumbent on him to apply for leave to sue the defendant in the ordinary Civil Court. He considered that he would be saved by the section and I think he was right in his view. The question must, therefore, be answered in the affirmative. Costs, two gold mohurs, to be costs in the case.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 144—Adverse possession—Landlord and tenant—Dispossession of tenant, effect of—Knowledge of landlord—Trespasser, possession of, nature of.

The general rule that where property is let out on lease the possession of a trespasser does not become adverse as against the lessor until the termination of the lease, is not applicable to a case where the tenant is holding over and the dispossession of the tenant is brought to the knowledge of the landlord. In such a case, the possession of the trespasser becomes adverse to the landlord's interest. [p. 937, col. 1.]

Kishwar Nath Sahi Dev v. Kali Sankar Sahai, 10 C. W. N. 343, followed.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Sylhet, dated the 1st October 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, Additional Court at that place, dated the 16th April 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Hemendra Kumar Das, for the Appellants, submitted that by dispossessing the defendant No. 6 the principal defendant, who was a trespasser, could not claim title by adverse possession as against the plaintiff who was the lessor. Plaintiff's title as a lessor could not be affected in the least by dispossession of his tenant by a trespasser. The Court of Appeal below, therefore, erred in law in holding that the suit was barred by limitation as it was not instituted within 12 years from the time when the lease to the defendant No. 6 expired and the plaintiff had knowledge of his tenant's dispossession. Hajra Sardara v. Kunja Behari Nag (1) referred to Babu Birendra Kumar De, for the Respondents —The learned Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the suit was barred by limitation. The case of Hajra Sardara v. Kunja Behari Nag (1) does not support the plaintiff's case. In this case the finding of the lower Appellate Court is that after the expiry of the lease where the defendant No. 6 was holding over with the consent of the plaintiff landlord, the principal defendant dispossessed the defendant No. 6, and continued to remain in possession of the land adversely to him for the statutory period, and during this whole period the plaintiff had full knowledge of the dispossession of his tenant. The present case is on all fours with the facts and circumstances of the case of Kishwar Nath Sahi Dev v. Kali Sanker Sahai (2). The general rule of law laid down in Hajra Sardara v. Kunja Behari Nag (1) has no application in this case. It is clear, therefore, that by adverse possession for the statutory period the principal defendant has acquired the limited interest of a tenant, and he is not liable to be ejected as a trespasser.

Babu Hemendra Kumar Das, for the Appellant, briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is preferred by the plaintiffs who, after getting a decree in the Court of first instance, had their suit dismissed by the lower Appellate Court on the ground that it was barred by limitation. The plaintiff's case is that the land was in actual possession of their tenant, defendant No. 6, who was at first joined with them as plaintiff. The lower Appellate Court has found that this defendant was dispossessed from the land by the principal defendant sometime not later than the year 1902.

The point pressed in this appeal is that this dispossession of the tenant by a trespasser could not affect the title of the plaintiffs, who are the lessors of the person who has been ejected. The principle on which this contention is based is clearly established and the latest case in which the authorities are reviewed is that of Hajra Sardara v. Kunja Behari Nag (1). There the principle is stated in the following terms, where property is let out in lease, the possession of the trespasser does not become adverse as against the lessor until the termination of the lease. Though there is this general rule, it is one to which there may be exceptions under certain circumstances and it appears to me on the finding of the lower Appellate Court that this is one of the cases to which the general rule is not applicable. In the case of Kishwar Nath Sahi Dev v Kali Sankar Sahai (2) after stating the general rule it is pointed out that when the lease has expired and the tenant is holding over with the landlord's consent and the possession of the trespasser is adequate in continuity, in publicity and in extent so as to show that it is possession adverse to the landlord, the latter is not precluded from determining the tenancy and suing the trespasser in ejectment and his right to sue will be barred after 12 years of such possession. It is not in every case where a tenant has been holding over that the general rule is inapplicable, but it seems to me on a consideration of the authorities that the general rule would be inapplicable in a case where the tenant is holding over and the dispossession of that tenant is brought to the knowledge of the landlord for a sufficient period to give the trespasser the statutory title. If the landlord has the right to take possession and knows that the person in possession is not his tenant, the possession of the person in possession under such circumstances would be adverse to the landlord's interest. Here admittedly the tenant was holding over, and it is found by the final Court of fact that the principal defendant's possession was adverse, open and public and so perfected his statutory title.

(1) 40 Ind. Cas. 271; 21 C. W. N. 1001; 25 C. L. J. 685.

(2) 10 C. W. N. 343.

I, therefore, hold that this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MI HLA MO WE—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182 (5), (6)—Execution of decree—Notice under cl. (6)—Step-in-aid of execution—Limitation, starting point of.

Where an application is made for a step-in-aid of execution which would entitle the applicant, under clause (5) of Article 182 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, to a starting point for the computation of the period of limitation, the fact that a notice was issued previously under clause (6) of the Article would not prevent the applicant from taking advantage of the provisions of clause (5).

Where both clauses (5) and (6) of Schedule I to the Limitation Act are applicable to the facts of a case, the decree-holder is entitled to have the one which is most favourable to him applied.

Mr. Lambert, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The point for determination in this appeal is whether an application for execution which would be time-barred if Article 182, clause 6, of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act be applied, since a notice had issued to show cause against execution as was required by the Code of Civil Procedure, and three years had elapsed since the issue of notice, can be held to be not time-barred, because of an application for a step in-aid of execution made subsequently to the issue of the notice. The learned District Judge has held that clause 5 of Article 182 of the Schedule applies and that the starting point for computation of the period of limitation is the date of application for a warrant of arrest issued on the 29th June. For the appellants it is contended that the starting point for the period of limitation is the 19th June, the date on which the notice to show cause was issued, and that as a notice has issued, clause 6 must be applied, and the fact that the notice has issued excludes the application of the 5th clause, even though an application for a step-in-aid of execution on a later date may be presumed.

I am unable to agree with this view. I do not think clauses 5 and 6 must be construed as mutually exclusive. When there has been an application for a step-in aid of execution which would entitle appellant under clause 5 to a starting point for the computation of the period of limitation, so that his application for execution would not be time-barred, I do not consider the decree-holder should be debarred from executing his decree, because a notice has issued, and if limitation were computed from that date, the application would be time-barred under clause 6. As both clauses are applicable to the facts of the case, the decree-holder is entitled to have the one which was most favourable to him applied. The appeal is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 63—Execution of decree—Attachment—Objections, petition of, asking that objections be recorded, effect of—"Kuri" transaction—Security, duty of bidder to furnish—Time, whether of essence of contract.

Where a person objects to the attachment of property and files a petition asking that his objections be recorded, without asking for an investigation of his claim, and the Court records his objections, such recording of objections does not amount to an order against the objector to which the provisions of rule 63 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code would apply. [p 939, col. 2.]

The rule in kuri transactions being that the amount which is payable to the bidder is to be paid to him only on his furnishing security for future instalments, time is of the very essence of the contract, and, unless the security is furnished within the prescribed period, the bidder loses his right to the amount payable to him. JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—The case arose out of a kuri transaction. The kuri was started by the 1st defendant, 1st respondent in the appeal, for Rs. 10,500 divided into 21 tickets of Rs. 500 each. One Narayanan Somayajipad had one ticket. He paid in 5 instalments and purchased the kuri amount at the 6th instalment sometime in 1913. His bidding was for a sum of Rs. 6,565. He was entitled to get that amount on furnishing security for future instalments, that is, for 15 more instalments, amounting altogether to Rs. 7,500. It appears that he could not find security and he pledged his kuri receipts for the amounts which he had already paid, it may be also what he was to get by his purchase: which is the correct interpretation of the transaction does not make any difference as to the point we have to decide. The present plaintiff appellant, who advanced money to Narayanan Somayajipad, afterwards instituted a suit in order to realise the money and before judgment attached the money which, according to him, was payable to Narayanan Somayajipad by the 1st defendant. It is alleged that the defendant preferred an objection under Order XXI, rule 58, of the Code of Civil Procedure to the attachment, but in the event, the attachment was made absolute and the property attached was sold and bought by appellant. In this suit, the appellant seeks to recover the amount of the kuri, both principal and interest, from the defendant.

It is proved that Narayanan Somyajipad did not furnish security within 30 days of the auction as required by the agreement. Repeated demands were made for security and even the plaintiff did not offer the security at least for 4 years. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that, under these circumstances, the plaintiff was not entitled to the money and decided against him.

The first point raised before us by Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar is as to the alleged agreement under which, it is said, the defendant agreed to hold the money for the plaintiff and invest it for him in proper securities and give him interest. The Subordinate Judge has dealt fully with this question in his judgment and has found that this allegation is not true, and I have not the least doubt that that finding is correct. It will be superfluous to add anything to that part of the first Court's judgment.

Then it was argued that under the karar the plaintiff was entitled to the money in the hands of the defendant and to reasonable interest on such amount. But one of the provisions of the karar is that the purchaser would be entitled to the money only on tendering proper security to the satisfaction of the starters. If the bidder made default and the amount of the bid was not found sufficient, then the deficit with interest at 12 per cent. would be recoverable from the purchaser at the discretion of the starter of the kuri. This, it is quite clear, negatives the case of the appellant. Neither Narayanan Somayajipad nor the plaintiff acted up to the agreement and it could not, therefore, be said that they were entitled to the kuri amount which the former had purchased at auction It is a well-known rule of kuri transactions that the amount which is payable to the bidder is to be paid to him only on his furnishing security for future instalments, and I do not understand how it can be said that even if the bidder failed to furnish security for the future instalments, he would still be entitled to the money. I should say, generally speaking and apart from the conduct of the parties in this case, that time in such transactions is the very essence of the contract. It may be that the defendants, by making a demand for security even after the expiry of one month specified in the karar, consented to extend the time, but it would not at all be reasonable to hold that the plaintiff became entitled to the money even though he failed to furnish security for 4 years after the sale at auction. I think that the Subordinate Judge was quite right in holding that the plaintiff had no claim against the defendants at all.

Then it was urged by Mr. Anantha-krishna Aiyar that rule 63, Order XXI, of the Civil Procedure Code applied to this case and, therefore, the plaintiff must be held to be entitled to the money claimed by him. We have been pressed by a recent decision of the Full Bench, Venkataratnam v. Ranganayakamma (1), as to the scope of this rule. There a petition of claim was put in but, it appears, too late, and the executing Court passed an order to the effect that the objections made by the claimant would be notified to the bidders. The Full Bench held that that amounted to an order under rule 63, Order XXI, and, therefore, a suit brought more than one year after the date of that order was barred. I do not think, however, that this decision, though it goes very far, covers the present case. In the present case the defendants in their petition did not ask for their claim or allegations to be investigated at all. Though they set out their objections in an affidavit filed along with the petition, the only thing they asked for in the petition by way of prayer was that the objections might be recorded, and the Court passed an order to the effect that the objections were recorded. In the Full Bench case, there was a prayer to investigate the claim although the petition was filed too late. It may be that the Court in that case did not in so many words reject the petition: but the learned members of the Full Bench construed what happened as amounting to a negativing of the right of the claimant and as such the order against him was held to come under rule 63, Order XXI. But it would be going too far to say that the rule applies to a case where a person, while putting in a petition setting out his objections, does not ask the Court to investigate his claim but expressly prays that his objections might be recorded. Whether the executing Court was justified in merely recording his objections, it is unnecessary to consider. But it could not be said that there was any order against the petitioner, because the petitioner did not ask for any order and the Court did not profess to pass any order on the merits of the petition. All that the Court was asked to do was to record the objections and the objections were accordingly recorded. I am, therefore, of opinion that rule 63 of Order XXI does not apply.

It was argued, I may mention, that we ought to relieve the plaintiff against the penal provision of the stipulation. But really no question of penalty arises because the plaintiff was not entitled to any money at all.

The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 10, applicability of—Pre-emption suit—Limitation, commencement of—Physical possession, delivery of, not possible, effect of.

The first part of the third column of Article 10 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act does not apply to a case where the subject-matter of the sale consists of land or other tangible immoveable property, physical possession whereof at the date of the sale is with the holder of a particular or intermediate estate, e g., an usufructuary mortgagee or a lessee, or a tenant for a time, owing to which circumstance the vendor is unable to give immediate physical possession to the purchaser. OPINION OF THE FULL BENCH.

STANYON, A. J. C.—(October 20th, 1917). —The answer to the question of law involved in this reference turns upon the interpretation of Article 10 of the Limitation Schedule 1908, though in the reference made the question is put as follows:—

'Whether the case of Baxiram v. Bhikaji (1) was rightly decided or not,'

Since a decision may be sound and just notwithstanding the fact that it includes an interpretation of some particular point of law which seems wrong to other Judges, it seems expedient to explain that the particular question upon which the opinion of the Full Bench is invited is whether the first part of the third column of Article 10, Limitation Schedule, 1908, applies to a case where the subject-matter of the sale consists of land or other tangible immoveable property, physical possession whereof at the date of the sale is with the holder of a particular or intermediate estate, e.g., an usufructuary mortgagee or a lessee or tenant for a time, owing to which circumstance the vendor is unable to give immediate physical possession to the purchaser. In the case mentioned in the reference that question was answered in the affirmative.

The facts which are material to the question now before us may be stated briefly. The plaintiff is the co-occupant of a survey number of unalienated land in Berar. Another co occupant, holding the northern half of this field, was the defendant Narayan, who mortgaged his share to the defendant Jairam. On the 11th April 1910 Jairam obtained a final decree for foreclosure against Narayan. At this time the share of Narayan was in the actual and physical possession of a lessee under a lease granted by the Collector to satisfy another decree which Jairam held against Narayan. That lease subsequently expired and in June 1911 Jairam entered into physical possession of Narayan's share transferred to him by the final foreclosure decree on the 11th April 1910. On the 11th December 1913 the plaintiff brought the suit out of which has arisen the appeal, leading to this reference, claiming to pre empt the said northern half by virtue of the right of pre-emption conferred upon him by the Berar Land Revenue Code, 1896. The defendant Jairam pleaded, inter alia, that the suit is barred by limitation, having been filed more than one year after the date on which he took physical possession of Narayan's share. This plea has been decided against Jairam. The view taken by Courts below may be stated thus:—

(a) Narayan's share was subject to a lease on the date of the final foreclosure decree; therefore by that decree Jairam obtained a transfer of something which did not admit of immediate physical possession by him: consequently the first part of Article 10 of the Limitation Schedule does not apply.

(b) The transfer to Jairam was not made by a registered instrument but by a decree: therefore the second part of the said Article does not apply.

(c) Hence, the suit is governed by Article 120 of the Limitation Schedule, and having been brought within six years of the date of the transfer is within time.

(1) Second Appeal No. 130-B of 1914.

Jairam has appealed to this Court, claiming that the suit is governed by the first part of Article 10, under which time began to run against the plaintiff's right of possession in the month of June 1911 when Jairam entered into physical possession. Mittra, A. J. C, found some conflict of opinion in this Court on the question whether a transfer of a right of co-occupancy subject to pre emption at a time when physical possession of the share is with some subordinate holder, e. g., a lessee or a mortgagee, is a transfer of a subject which does not admit of physical possession. On the one hand he found the decision of Skinner, A. J. C., in Ramji v. Sheikh Mansur (2) to the effect that where property sold is subject to an existing lease, it is not capable of physical possession within the meaning of the first part of entry in the third column of Article 10 of the Limitation Schedule, 1877 (which has been repeated in the Schedule of 1908). On the other hand there were decisions for which I am chiefly responsible, including that in Baxiram v. Bhikaji (1), in which it was held that where the property sold is land, the subject-matter of the sale does admit of physical possession and that irrespective of any intervening lease, time would only run against the pre-emptor under the first part of Article 10 from the date on which the purchaser entered into physical possession. Under these circumstances Mittra, A. J. C., has referred the question for the opinion of a Full Bench.

I have given the matter the most earnest consideration and studied all the authorities. I have also had the advantage of discussing the question with my learned colleagues: and I have come to the conclusion, though with regret and reluctance, that I cannot sustain the dissent from the decision of Skinner, A. J. C., in Ramji v. Sheikh Mansur (2) which I adopted in (sic). In that case, the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner expressed his dissent from the decision of my brother Batten, in Yesaji v. Ramkrishna (3), which, however, was a peculiar case decided with reference to its own particular circumstances, and can easily be distinguished in his opinion from the present case. In Dattatraya Shanker v. Pandurang (4) decided on the 23rd November 1914, I gave detailed reasons for my inability to concur with the dictum in Ramji v. Sheikh Mansur (2). When Baxiram v. Bhikaji (1) went before Prideaux, A. J. C., he found the above conflict of views and on his representation the Judicial Commissioner referred the appeal for decision by a Division Bench. It came before Prideaux, A. J. C., and myself sitting as such a Bench and was decided on the 12th April 1915. Ramji v. Sheikh Mansur (2) was respectfully dissented from and Dattatraya Shanker v. Pandurang (4) was followed.

The reasons which commended the view adopted as to the meaning of the third column of Article 10 by Prideaux, A. J. C., and myself were thus stated in our judgment: —

"The language used is simple and clear, and seems to us to deal with two descriptions of property, namely, (1) that which does and (2) that which does not admit of physical possession. There is no definition of 'property' of general applicability made anywhere by the Indian Legislature: but it may be accepted as a safe conclusion that under the term 'immoveable property' the law of British India recognizes the existence of estates and interests, both tangible and intangible, which in English Law would be called corporeal and incorporeal hereditaments.* * *

"In the Article of the Limitation Schedule now under consideration the Legislature seems to have had before it these two descriptions of property, namely, (1) that which does and (2) that which does not admit of physical possession. Property is generally capable of physical possession and, therefore, the rule is that time begins to run against the pre emptor when the purchaser takes physical possession, it being of the essence of the right of pre emption to prevent such invasion on a co-occupancy: but in exceptional cases physical invasion being impossible, the Legislature has been compelled to enact as an exception to the rule the only reasonable alternative available. The Article does not deal with any case of the sale of intangible property by an unregistered instrument or orally, because it does not appear that the Law of British India ever recognized such a transfer: and since 1882 it has been made impossible in territories to which the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, applies. Therefore, if the section is interpreted as we think it ought to be, namely, as one whereof the application is governed by the nature of the property sold, it is obviously exhaustive and covers every possible case of pre-emption. But uncertainty has been introduced into the application of the Article by some of the published decisions, and it seems expedient to examine some of the relevant case-law."

Thereafter we commented on the cases of Jageshar Singh v. Jawahir Singh (5), Bijai Ram v. Kallu (6), Jaikaran Rai v. Ganga Dhari Rai(7), Unkar Das v. Narain (8), Bholi v. Imam Ali (9) and Betul Bagam v. Mansur Ali Khan (10), confirmed by the Privy Council in Batul Bagam v. Mansur Ali Khan (11), and endeavoured to show that none of these decisions in itself afforded support to the view taken in Ramji v. Sheikh Mansur(2). We found, however, that it was certainly sustained by certain decisions of the Punjab Chief Court, and in discussing the principal one among these rulings we made the following observations:

"The case of Panna Lal v. Bhagwan Das (12) is very much in point, and gives direct support to the view taken in Ramji v. Sheikh Mansur (2). There certain house-property situated in the Hissar District of the Punjab, and occupied by tenants, was sold by the owners to a purchaser by a deed of sale executed and registered in Bombay where both vendors and purchaser carried on business. This sale took place on the 12th March 1895. The vendee obtained physical possession in January 1897.

"The Chief Court took the view that a pre emption suit lodged in April 1897 to impeach the sale of the 12th March 1895 was time barred, even though the pre emptor had no knowledge of the sale until the purchaser took physical possession in January 1897. This decision was based on the proposition that the property being in the physical possession of tenants did not admit of physical possession by the vendee on the date of the sale, and that, therefore, time began to run against the right of pre-emption from March 1895, when the deed of sale was registered. The ignorance of the pre-emptor as to the accrual of his rights during the whole of the limitation period was held to afford him no relief, because it had not been caused by any fraud on the part of vendors or purchaser. It was argued before the learned Judges responsible for the above decision that the intention of the Legislature in enacting Article 10 was to draw a distinction between two classes of property, one of which does and the other of which does not admit of physical possession. As to this argument the judgment contains the following passage:—

'The subject is not free from difficulty, but we think the argument of the learned Counsel for the appellant as to the two classes into which all property should be divided is not perfectly sound. Doubtless a clear distinction can be drawn between property which is ordinarily capable of physical possession, such as a house, and property which is ordinarily incapable of physical possession, such as an equity of redemption, a contingent remainder, or a share of undivided land, but this does not cover the whole subject. Physical possession of the first class according to recent rulings, viz., Batul Begam v. Mansur Ali Khan (10), must be considered to mean immediate and personal possession; consequently, in the case of a house let to tenants, the purchasers cannot be said to obtain possession so long as the tenants remain in the house, even if they attorn to him and pay him rent'. ... ...

"With due respect we are unable to accept the Punjab view adopted in Ramji v. Sheik

Mansur (2) as a correct interpretation of the law. The Legislature has insisted, by repeated amendments, that as far as possible the short period of limitation allowed to a pre emptor shall not begin to run until there is an invasion of the kind against which all laws and customs are directed, namely, the entry of a stranger upon a joint or common estate in the place of one part-owner thereof, irrespective of the wishes of the remaining co-owner or co-owners. It seems to us that before the Law of Limitation begins to operate against a pre-emptor, it requires him to have knowledge that his cause of action has arisen beyond all doubt, namely, by the entry of the purchaser into physical possession of the property in every case where the nature of the property makes such possession possible. It is only where the property itself is of a kind not susceptible to physical possession that the Legislature provides the only possible alternative, namely, such notice as can be given to the pre-emptor by the registration of the sale. There is no authority for reading into Article 10 something which is not there. The Punjab Courts have done so in the latest of the above cases; for they have interpreted the words 'does not admit of physical possession' to signify 'does not, for the time being, admit of physical and personal possession by the purchaser.' The Article assumes the existence of a registered instrument in every case to which the second part of the entry in the third column applies; and we think that this indicates that the words 'does not admit of physical possession' refer to the nature of the property and to nothing else. If the Legislature had intended to apply the second part of the entry to cases where the property sold, though by its nature capable of physical possession, cannot immediately be given into the physical possession of the purchaser, it would have said so. The language used in this part makes no reference to the possession of any person but, in the clearest words, is a definition of the property which is the subject of the sale.

"The Punjab decision followed by Skinner, A. J. C., involved an interpretation of the Law of Limitation which we are unable to follow, inasmuch as it was held that a right of suit had been destroyed by time without any neglect of his right by the plaintiff who was in innocent ignorance of his cause of action having accrued. We are fortified in this dissent by the very recent decision of the Madras High Court in Mamabi v. Kunhifappi Haji (13), where it was held that a right of pre-emption cannot be said to arise unless the plaintiff has the necessary knowledge of the sale. Such a right can only be exercised when the person entitled to it knows first of all that the property is sold or attempted to be sold to another person, and what are the terms of the sale or proposed sale. Without such knowledge he is not in a position to elect. The law of limitation being directed against laches, it is opposed to its fundamental principle to hold that it operates against a plaintiff who is in ignorance of the facts which give him the right to sue. ... ...

"But a further argument has been advanced, namely, that a usufructuary mortgage or a lease being the transfer of a part of an estate of ownership which carries with it the right of physical possession, all that is left with the original owner after it has been executed, is an intangible fraction of his ownership. Therefore when he sells that, he parts with something which no longer admits of physical possession: and a pre-emptor's suit to impeach such a sale must be governed by the second part of Article 10. In this connection reference has been made to Shiam Sundar v. Amanat Begam (14) and Ramasami Patter v. Ohinnan Asari (15). In all these cases it was held that an 'equity of redemption' is an intangible thing, which does not admit of physical possession. This is also the view taken by the lower Court in the present case. It is, therefore, a point on which something has to be said.

"Under the Law of England when a mortgage is made, the legal estate is transferred to the mortgagee, and the mortgagor retains a right to have it reconveyed to him, upon payment of a specified sum on a certain date. If such payment was not made, then under common law the estate automatically became finally the property of the mortgagee, but the Courts of Equity interfered and gave the mortgagor, notwithstanding default in payment on the contractual due date, further time to pay the debt and redeem the property. This practice became universal, and the concession so made to the debtor came to be called the 'equity of redemption'. It is obviously an intangible thing in the fullest sense of that term. But in India, except in the case of what is called an English mortgage, the equity of redemption, so called, has no existence. Owing to a habit of borrowing terms from English Law which has naturally grown up in this country and is sometimes responsible for anomaly and confusion in interpreting the law, the phrase 'equity of redemption' is constantly misused by the Indian Courts to denote the right of redemption which has been incorporated in the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. But there is no such thing as the transfer of the whole legal estate of ownership in any form of mortgage recognized by that Act except the English mortgage defined in clause (e) of section 58. English mortgages have been used in Presidency towns and among Europeans, in other parts of India; and on such mortgages the Indian Courts have accorded to the parties thereto the same rights as are recognised in the English Courts. But even in this respect a distinction was made between Europeans and Hindus. [See Manly v. Patterson (16) and Shernomoyee Dasi v. Srinath Das (17).] The Transfer of Property Act, 1882, merely recognises a form of transaction which had already come into existence in India before it was enacted: but the idea of the legal estate of ownership passing from the mortgagor to the mortgagee, leaving with the former only an intangible estate in equity, is absolutely foreign to the conception of a mortgage in India: and the term 'equity of redemption' applied to the mortgagor's interest in any Indian form of mortgage is a misnomer.

"There is a fascinating subtlety in the disembodiment of legal rights from the corpus of the property in which they ordinarily exist, and lawyers are prone to deal with them as incorporeal entities, and to sub-divide them as such. In this way we obtain interests of varying extent in land, such as free-hold, copy-hold, lease-hold, estates for life, in reversion and in remainder. In systems, like the Law of England, where this method prevails we are presented with a conception of an estate of ownership broken up into fractions, each of which is possessed by a different person, so that there is no owner, properly so called, for the time being. The Indian Legislature has tried to avoid the adoption of a system too highly technical and scientific, its object being to legislate so that a mass of people, mostly unversed in the academic conceptions of English Law, may readily understand and apply the enactments designed for their use and benefit. That many of the principles of English Law, both adjective and substantive, should find place in British Indian enactments, is only natural under the circumstances; but very obvious attempts have been made to present them in a vulgar and non-technical form. Under the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, there is no transfer of ownership except by sale (voluntary or compulsory), gift or exchange. In other transactions recognised by the enactments we have transfers of interest which subject the owner and his property to burdens, but which leave the ownership otherwise intact. In England, if you sell land which you have mortgaged or leased for a term, you transfer an equity of redemption or an estate of reversion. In India, in such a case, you sell your land. It may be said that here we have a difference only in nomenclature and not in substance. That is so, but it is a circumstance which makes the argument stronger against allowing more forms to vary the application of substantive provisions of law. In Ramasami Patter v. Chinnan Asari (15) one learned Judge, applying the technicalities of English Law, held,

(1) that the equity of redemption in an usufructuary morgage is an intangible thing, which can only be sold by a registered instrument under section 54, Transfer of Property Act, 1882;

(2) that the equity of redemption in a simple mortgage is tangible property; and

(3) that the interest of a simple mortgage is an intangible thing.

"It seems to us with due respect that the term 'equity of redemption' is a misnomer in the first two of the above dicta: and the inconsistency of holding the same estate to be tangible in one case and intangible in the other is manifest. Such formulæ lead to endless anomaly and confusion. We do not think that it was ever intended by the Indian Legislature to apply Article 10 of the Limitation Schedule or any other of its enactments upon the principle or assumption that though the ownership of unencumbered property or the right to redeem a non-possessory mortgage comprise tangible estate, capable of physical possession, the ownership of encumbered property or the right to redeem an usufructuary mortgage constitute intangible things which do not permit of physical possession. We think and hold that when the owner of tangible immoveable property in a territory covered by the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, sells the same, he effects a transfer of ownership in property which does admit of physical possession, whether at the time of sale such property be in his own possession or in possession of his mortgagee or lessee as such: and that a suit by a pre-emptor to impeach the sale will be governed by the first part of Article 10 of the Limitation Schedule, and time will only begin to run against it from the date on which the purchaser takes physical possession of the whole of the property."

It has been urged that if the above view is correct, no suit for pre emption can ever be brought where the owner of a property liable to pre emption sells it subject to a lease in perpetuity, while a purchaser of a property over which his physical possession is postponed owing to an intervening temporary estate of possession, may find himself deprived of his purchase many years after he has made it. As to the case of a lease in perpetuity, it is obvious that the pre emptor's position remains unaffected by the sale of the perpetual lessor's interest, and no suit for pre emption is necessary. In the case of a temporary intervening estate, it must be remembered that a cause of action for a pre-emption suit arises only when there is wrongdoing on the part of the vendor and neglect on the part of the vendee. Under every system of pre-emption known to me, it is the duty of the intending vendor to give notice to the person having a right of pre-emption of his intention to sell. And it is clearly a course of caution for an intending purchaser of an estate subject to a right of pre-emption to see that the person having such right is given an opportunity of exercising his option. A purchaser who buys and a mortgagee who forecloses seeing that such an option has been given, has only his own want of care to thank for any inconvenience or loss he may suffer from a delayed pre-emption suit. But even if an interpretation of law is to be governed by the nature of the results ensuing from it, it is clear that anomalies and difficulties of a far more serious kind arise if we interpret the third column of Article 10, Limitation Schedule, in the way approved by the Punjab Chief Court and Skinner, A. J. C., in the cases above cited.

I have already shown that in the Punjab case a right of pre emption became time-barred without the owner of such right having any notice, direct or constructive, that his cause of action had arisen. I have also drawn attention to the Madras case in which the estates of mortgagor and mortgagee in land were held to be tangible in one form of mortgage and intangible in another. Other anomalies flow from these. For example, if the interest transferred to a simple mortgage is intangible, then where the mortgage is for less than Rs. 100, we may have a transfer of an intangible thing from mortgagor to mortgagee effected without a registered instrument, while if the mortgagee desires to assign that same interest to any one else, he can only do so by a registered instrument. Similarly when the owner of a field who has created an usufructuary mortgage upon it wishes to sell it, he has only an intangible thing in his possession, and though the mortgage may be for less than Rs. 100 and made orally by delivery of the property, any transfer of the rights to redeem cannot be effected without a registered document.

There are other cases of a kind likely to occur. Suppose A and B are two Hindu brothers divided in estate, but co-occupants of a survey number in Berar, divided by metes and bounds, the northern half belonging to A and the southern half belonging to B. A dies leaving a widow W but no issue. B under a claim of survivorship takes possession, and turns A's widow out. She goes away to another part of the country and sells her inheritance in the field to X by a deed duly registered, and X sues B for possession of W's share. B, honestly believing in his right of survivorship, contests the suit. It is decided against him more than a year after the date of the sale to X by W. Within one year of X's entering into possession of the share B sues to pre-empt. Is it not obviously unjust to hold that suit time-barred? If it be said that B can set up his right of pre-emption as a defence in X's suit for possession, then X can always defeat that move by not filing his suit for more than one year after the date of his registered deed of purchase.

Again M owns and occupies the northern half of a house in which N, the owner of the other half, has a right of pre-emption. Y buys M's share subject to a condition that M shall continue to occupy it for a month to enable him to clear away his personal effects. Here the Punjab Chief Court would presumably declare that the subject-matter of the sale was capable of physical possession, though the entry of the purchaser is delayed for a month. But if on the date of the sale he was not occupying the house himself but had let it to a tenant whose lease was to expire one week after the date of the sale, then according to the Punjab view, the subject matter of the sale is not capable of physical possession. This seems to me to bring the law into ridicule.

Again, having regard to the raison d'etre of a right of pre-emption, namely, in order that a co-owner may not have an undesirable stranger substituted for another co owner, we see in the present case that although the plaintiff has submitted to the invasion by the purchaser from June 1911, when he entered into physical possession, until December 1913, when this suit was brought—a period exceeding by six months, the maximum period allowed by law to a pre-emptor governed by the first part of Article 10, Limitation Schedule, yet upon the Punjab interpretation of that Article, the suit is within time.

I adhere to the opinion that when the owner of a house sells the same, the subject-matter of the sale is a house, and the sale gives the vendee the same rights as the vendor had at the date of the sale. The house may be subject to a usufructuary mortgage, or a lease or other temporary estate obstructing immediate physical entry by the vendor. But, however circumstanced it may be, the subject matter of the sale is the house, and no further transaction is necessary to entitle the vendee to take physical possession of the house whenever the vendor himself might have done so, had no sale taken place. If the house is with a tenant at the date of sale, then on expiry of the tenant right the purchaser takes possession by virtue of the same deed under which for a time he could not enter. Much has been made of the words used to define a sale in the Transfer of Property Act. But to my mind such an argument is misleading. A definition of the elements which go to make up a human body does not make the thing defined anything but a body. As I have already said, such analysis of legal transactions is fascinating to pedantic lawyers. It sounds very well to describe a sale of land as the transfer of an interest in land passing from the vendor to the vendee for a price paid, and so on. But in whatever technical terms you may paint it, when I sell my house, whether unincumbered in my possession or let to any one else for a term, the thing which I sell, the property with which I part is my house; and that is something which is by its nature capable of physical possession. It must be remembered that technical phraseology is the very breath of life to professors whether of law or of any other of the learned professions. On a trial for assault a medical witness informed the Court that on examining the complainant he found him 'suffering from a severe contusion of the integuments under the left orbit, with great extravasation of blood and ecchymosis in the surrounding cellular tissue, which was in a tumefied state. There was also considerable abrasion of the cuticle.' It required the vulgar common sense of the Judge to ascertain that this was a description of a 'black eye'. Technical phraseology must not be allowed as I fear it frequently is allowed, to confuse us in making a just and reasonable application of the law. In my opinion the only way in which the principles and rights of the law of pre-emption can be enforced justly and reasonably is by providing that the cause of action for a suit by a pre-emptor who has been denied his option out of Court, shall arise on the day on which the physical entry of the purchaser as an undesirable co occupant or neighbour first breaks into the comfort and convenience which every law of pre-emption is designed to protect. If, therefore, in the language of Article 10 of the Limitation Schedule I could find sure ground or even sufficient ambiguity to allow me to credit the Legislature with the intention to make such a provision, I would adhere to the view propounded in Baxiram v. Bhikaji (1).

But after careful consideration I have now formed the opinion that interpreted in accordance with well established judicial principles, the third column of Article 10 cannot sustain that view. In Musammat Salu Bai v. Bajat Khan (18) I referred to the duty of British Indian Courts in interpreting Statute Law, and to the tendency of Judges to strain interpretation to give effect to some view deemed to be consonant with justice, equity and good conscience. I think that I fell to that temptation in Baxiram v. Bhikaji (1) for the judgment in which I am mainly responsible. My chief reason for amending my opinion lies in this that if Baxiram v. Bhikaji (1) contained a correct interpretation for the legislative intention, then every case of pre-emption would be governed by the first part and no case by the second part, since pre-emption is a right inseparably connected with tangible immoveable property. There is no such thing as pre-emption of an immunity or other intangible thing. That would make the second part of the Article a superfluity. Again, in the second part the Legislature does not deal only with the phrase 'intangible thing.' It uses the phrase 'reversion or other intangible thing.' The legal significance of the word reversion is too well established to be open to discussion. It is used in two senses, i.e., either to denote an estate left continuing during the particular estate; or to signify the return of the land after the particular estate ended. In English Law it is the undisposed of interest in land which reverts to the grantor after the exhaustion of the particular estate, e.g., for years, for life, or in tail, which he may have created. It is impossible to hold to the view that in using this word the Indian Legislature did not intend to refer to an estate of full ownership subject to a lesser estate carved out of it, e.g., a lease, a mortgage, or a temporary grant.

Finally, it cannot be disputed that there is now considerable authority to sustain the view taken by Skinner, A. J. C., in Ramji v. Sheikh Mansur (2). Therefore I concur with my learned colleagues in the view that Baxiram v. Bhikaji (1) should be overruled.

MITTRA, A. J. C.—(December 20th, 1917.) —The question referred to the Full Bench is whether the judgment in Baxiram's case (1) with regard to the interpretation of Article 10 of the Limitation Act is correct.

The language of Article 10, as has been often pointed out, is not free from difficulty, but I think the view which prevails in all Courts which had to interpret that Article should be adopted rather than the view taken in Baxiram's case (1). The only case which supports the conclusion reached there is a Punjab case which has since been overruled.

The learned Judges in the case under consideration say:—

"We think and hold that when the owner of tangible immoveable property in a territory covered by the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, sells the same, he effects a transfer of ownership in property which does admit of physical possession, whether at the time of sale such property be in his own possession or in the possession of his mortgagee or lessee as such: and that a suit by a pre-emptor to impeach the sale will be governed by the first part of Article 10 of the Limitation Schedule, and time will only begin to run against it from the date on which the purchaser takes physical possession of the [whole of the property."

The judgment points out that Article 10 deals with two descriptions of property, namely, (1) that which does and (2) that which does not admit of physical possession. It then proceeds:—

"Therefore if the section is interpreted as we think it ought to be, namely, as one whereof the application is governed by the nature of the property sold, it is obviously exhaustive and covers every case of pre-emption."

In a later part of the same judgment it is stated that the Privy Council decision in Batul Begam's case (11) has no application to specific property which, by its nature, is capable of physical possession, e g., a particular field or other area of land, a house or the like which can be specifically possessed by human agency. In the concluding part of the judgment it is argued as follows:—

'In England, if you sell land which you have mortgaged or leased for a term, you transfer an equity of redemption or an estate of reversion. In India, in such a case, you sell your land."

In this connection I may point out that the learned Judges take exception to the use of the expression 'intangible thing.' The judgment then criticises Sir Bhashyam Aiyangar's well known dicta in Ramasami Patter v. Chinnan Atari (15).

With due respect I am unable to agree with this. The law deals with things only in relation to legal rights and duties. A sale is defined by the Transfer of Property Act as the transfer of 'ownership', that is of 'rights'. But a group of rights is often treated in law as a thing. Thus section 54 speaks of reversion or other intangible thing. Professor Holland in his Elements of Jurisprudence, 12th Edition, at page 102, after pointing out a similar artificial use of the term 'res' by Cicero, Gaius and Roman writers generally, says:—

"It is no doubt convenient for the purposes of our science to include among 'things', not only physical objects, but also certain groups of rights, which, for purposes of transfer and otherwise, are occasionally treated as if they were physical objects. The fiction by which patents, bankrupts' estates, or easements are regarded as 'things', is indeed not only harmless but almost indispensable."

Article 10 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act runs as follows:—

To enforce a right of pre-emption, whether the right is founded on law, or general usage, or on special contract.	One year.	When the purchaser takes, under the sale sought to be impeached, physical possession in the whole of the property sold, or, where the subject of the sale does not admit of physical possession, when the instrument of sale is registered.

It is only a thing which is capable of physical possession, rights being only capable of enjoyment. 'The subject of the sale', 'the property sold', is the group of rights artificially regarded as a 'thing'. It is in reference to such rights that we have to determine whether the 'thing' sold is capable of physical possession, that is, 'personal and immediate possession.'

Commenting upon the Punjab decisions the judgment proceeds as follows:—

"There is no authority for reading into Article 10 something which is not there. The Punjab Court have done so in the latest of the above cases; for they have interpreted the 'does not admit of physical possession' to signify 'does not, for the time being, admit of physical and personal possession by the purchaser.' The Article assumes the existence of a registered instrument in every case to which the second part of the entry in the third column applies; and we think that this indicates that the words 'does not admit of physical possession' refer to the nature of the property and to nothing else. If the Legislature had intended to apply the second part of that entry to cases where the property sold, though by its nature capable of physical possession, cannot immediately be given into the physical possession of the purchaser, it would have said so. The language used in this part makes no reference to the possession of any person but, in the clearest words, is a definition of the property which is the subject of the sale."

With great respect I am unable to agree with this argument. The starting point of limitation under the first part of the entry in the third column is the taking of Physical possession by the purchaser. Obviously the expression 'does not admit of physical possession', therefore, refers to physical possession by the purchaser. It does not, in my opinion, refer to lawful physical possession being possible at any future period but at the time of sale. A contingent right may one day become a vested right capable of enjoyment by physical possession. The interest of a coparcener in joint property may admit of physical possession after partition. Similarly a house or a field sold subject to a lease or usufructuary mortgage in favour of a third party, as in the case here, may be capable of physical possession by the purchaser on the expiry of the lease or upon redemption. The construction sought to be put upon the latter part of the entry in the third column of Article 10 is, in my opinion, unduly narrow. To hold that time runs from such a future date, however long it may be, seems to be against the policy of the law which allows a short period of enforcing a right of pre-emption. Even minority or other disability is no ground for extending this period. Under the Berar Land Revenue Code the price to be paid is the price fixed by the parties in the sale deed, unless the price is found by the Court not to have been fixed in good faith. Upon the view taken in Baxiram's case (1) although the property may have increased considerably in value when the purchaser takes possession after the expiry of a lease or mortgage, he can only get what he had himself paid.

Time runs against the pre-emptor from the date when he has constructive notice, whether from the purchaser taking physical possession or from the registration of the instrument. It is naturally presumed that a person entitled to immediate physical possession will take it as soon as he can, but if he does not, it is intelligible that time does not run against the pre-emptor.

The judgment of the Privy Council in Batul Begam v. Mansur Ali (11) does not decide the point now before us. It lays down that physical possession means 'personal and immediate possession.' At page 26 occurs the following suggestive passage:—

"The physical possession of the villages was with others, and Bhagwati, not having enforced a partition, could not get physical possession of any definite portion of those lands and had no right to oust the existing occupiers."

I understand from this that undivided property after partition admits of physical possession, provided there is a right to oust the existing occupiers. The fact that the property sold is in the possession of a trespasser does not prevent the property being susceptible of physical possession. But neither undivided property nor property in the occupancy of a tenant or other person entitled to occupy the same admits of physical possession within the meaning of Article 10.

I agree that Baxiram v. Bhikaji (1) should be overruled.

BATTEN, A. C. J.—(February 27th, 1919.) —I had hoped to have pronounced a fully reasoned opinion in this case but I have been unable to do so. In view of the reference in the opinion of Stanyon, A. J. C., to my ruling in Yesai v. Ramkrishna (3), I think it necessary to state that my ruling in that case was confined to the special circumstances of the case and has no bearing on the question now before us The question for the decision of the Full Bench has been stated by Stanyon, A. J. C., as follow:—

"Whether the first part of the third column of Article 10, Limitation Schedule, 1908, applies to a case where the subject-matter of the sale consists of land or other tangible immoveable property physical possession whereof at the date of the sale is with the holder of a particular or intermediate estate, e. g., an usufructuary mortgagee or a lessee or a tenant for a time, owing to which circumstance the vendor is unable to give immediate physical possession to the purchaser."

In Baxiram v. Bhikaji (1) Stanyon, A. J. C., and Prideaux, A. J. C., answered the question in the affirmative. In making the reference to the Full Bench Mittra, A. J. C., doubted the correctness of this decision, and both Stanyon, A. J. C., and Mittra, A. J. C., have recorded opinions to the effect that the question should be answered in the negative, and that the expression 'does not admit of physical possession' refers to immediate physical possession by the predecessor,

They concur in saying that Baxiram v. Bhikaji (1) should be overruled. With the opinions of my learned colleagues I agree. The view adopted by them is the only one that, in my opinion, can give a consistent meaning to the words "physical possession" in the first and second parts of the third column. It will be observed that Stanyon, A. J. C., has changed his view. This he would not have done except for very stringent and convincing reasons. In the last sentence of his opinion he says 'I concur with my learned colleagues in the view that Baxiram v. Bhikaji (1) should be overruled.' He was aware when he delivered his opinion what my recorded opinion would be and, as he himself says, I had the advantage of discussing the question with both my learned colleagues. My opinion is the same as that of both my colleagues.

JUDGMENT.—(March 6th, 1919).—According to the unanimous opinion of the Full Bench the suit is not barred by limitation. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs. One set of costs to be awarded to Sitaram, plaintiff-respondent.

Appeal dismissed.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 60—Creditor and debtor—Appropriation of payments—Collection of debt due to debtor—Prejudice to third parties, effect of.

A creditor's right of appropriation of payments on behalf of the debtor towards any particular debt due to him is preserved until the moment of his filing his plaint in Court. In appropriating a particular debt the creditor is not bound to look to the likely or probable prejudice which might be caused to third parties having claims against the debtor, but can put himself in an advantageous position so long as it is not unconscionable or inequitable on his part to do so. Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 104 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Conjeevaram, in Original Suit No. 951 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The plaintiff should have appropriated what he collected on behalf of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to his mortgage debt, so that his liability might be discharged pro tanto. He should have elected immediately he had his debtor's money. The delay in appropriation prejudices the rights of others having claims against the same debtor.

Mr. T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyar, for the Respondent.—There is no time limit to the exercise of the right to appropriate. The plaintiff was entitled to wait till the last possible moment. He had no concern with the interests of third parties, and his right cannot be taken away unless there was anything inequitable in his action.

JUDGMENT.—An interesting question was argued by Mr. K. Rajah Ayyar relating to appropriation of payments. The plaintiff had a mortgage from defendants Nos. 1 and 2. There was also a debt due to him from them on a promissory note. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 requested the plaintiff to collect some money due to them from a third party. This was done on the 16th August, 1915. Prior to that, the plaintiff sued on his pro note, and obtained a decree. In his earlier execution application, he could not have asked that the money collected by him should be credited in partial discharge of the decree. On the 11th November 1915 under another money decree against defendants Nos 1 and 2, the 3rd defendant purchased the equity of redemption in the properties mortgaged. Five days after this, plaintiff entered up satisfaction of his money decree to the extent of the money collected by him. He then sued for the full amount due on the mortgage. The 3rd defendant contended that the plaintiff should have appropriated the money to the mortgage debt and that his liability pro tanto should be discharged. The lower Appellate Court refused to accept this contention. We think the District Judge was right.

It is now well settled that the plaintiff's right of appropriation is preserved to him until the moment of his filing the plaint in Court. See Lord Macnaghten in Cory Brothers & Co. v. The Owners of the Turkish Steamship "Mecca" (1). In Seymour v. Pickett (2) Lord Justice Romer pointed out that, provided it will not be inequitable to do so, the plaintiff should not be deprived of this right. Mr. K. Rajah Ayyar contends that when the rights of third parties are likely to be prejudiced, it must be taken that it would be inequitable on the part of the plaintiff to make the appropriation in a particular way. Our reading of the learned Lord Justice's judgment is that there must be something unconscionable, something which would operate as an estoppel, before this right of the plaintiff is taken away. It was held in Simson v. Ingham (3) that a creditor can cancel an appropriation entered in the accounts if the same was not communicated to the defendant. This authority shows that the question of inequity has to be looked at not only from the point of view of the third party, but also from the point of view whether the creditor should not endeavour to put himself in an advantageous position so long as there is nothing which makes it unconscionable on his part to do so. Viewed in this light we think the District Judge has applied the proper test in giving his decision.

We may say that the decision in Kundan Lal v. Jagan Nath (4), which seeks to go back to the principle enunciated in Clayton's case (5), namely, that the creditor should elect as soon as the payment is made, is opposed to the language of the Indian Contract Act and to Cory Brothers & Co. v. The Owners of the Turkish Steamship "Mecca" (1) and to Seymour v. Pickett (2).

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

These second appeals coming on for hearing on the 20th August 1917, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The landlord in these suits under the Madras Estates Land Act appeals in respect of three items, namely, Vanpayir, (2) Pada Nazzar, (3) Vagaira,

On the first point, we think that the District Judge was in error in regarding the provisions of section 13 (3) of the Act as precluding him from finding, from the payment of higher rates for a long series of years prior to the passing of the Act, that an implied contract existed to pay at these rates in future. It was decided in Venkata Perumal v. Ramudu (1) that section 13 applied to improvements made after the new Act came into force and had no retrospective effect. The Judge has referred to the fact that the Jamabandi accounts and Pattas show that these special rates have been paid since 1330, and we must now ask him to find as a question of fact whether the payments made by each of the tenants concerned in these appeals have been continuing for such a length of time that it may be properly presumed that they are based on an agreement between the parties and that there must have been some consideration for that agreement. We do not follow the judgment of the learned Judges that decided Arunachelum Chetty v. Syyad Ahamed Ambalam (2) so far as they expressed an opinion that consideration for agreement implied from payments for a number of years must depend on independent proof for its existence and cannot be presumed from the same facts as the agreement itself. [Vide, Prayaga Doss Jee Varu v. Venkama Naidu (3).]

On the second point, the District Judge has found that Pada Nazzar was not a part of rent, there is evidence to support his finding and the name itself suggests that it is a payment of the description referred to in section 143, rather than in section 3 (11), of the Act. We think this was rightly disallowed. On the last point it has not been shown that any crops other than those described in clause 9 of the Patta were grown in the suit Faslis and, therefore, the omission of the word "vagaira" in the Pattas for that Fasli is immaterial. The clause as amended by the lower Court may stand in the present Patta.

Finding on the first point is to be on the evidence on record and is to be returned within two months. Ten days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the District Judge of Ramnad at Madura submitted the following

FINDING.—I am directed to find as a question of fact "Whether the payments made by each of the tenants concerned in these appeals have been continuing for such a length of time that it may be properly presumed that they are based on an agreement between the parties and that there must have been some consideration for that agreement."

2. Both the presumptions referred to in the issue are presumptions of fact and as observed by their Lordships in Prayaga Doss Jee Varu v. Venkama Naidu (3), "there is no principle by which Courts are to be enabled to make the one presumption and disabled from making the other", and "the consideration may be of the same implied nature as the covenant to pay." Before referring to the evidence adduced in the cases before me, it may be useful to quote another important observation of their Lordships in the said second appeals that "the distinction between contract rates and customary rates is a very subtle one as between landlords and tenants" and that "the facts and the evidence to prove a contract, where the contract is a very old one, are almost the same as those on which a custom to pay enhanced rents has to be proved, if such a custom is valid."

3. Now, we have three tenants concerned in these cases. One of them holds Pattas Nos. 457 and 42. Patta No 457 corresponds to old Pattas Nos. 266 and 372. Exhibits XI, XI (a) and XI (b) are Muchilikas for Faslis 1292, 1299 and 1300 respectively. Exhibits A to A(6) are Pattas for Patta No. 266 for Faslis ranging from 1305 to 1317. Exhibits B to B (2) are Pattas for Pattadar No. 372 for Faslis 1310 to 13 2. Exhibits XI (c) and XI (d) are Muchilikas for recent Faslis 1319 and 1320. It will be noticed that the earliest of these documents relates to Fasli 1292 (1882 83)

4. Another tenant is concerned with Patta No. 150 and the documents XVII (a) and XVII (b) are for Faslis 1305 and 1306. They are the earliest Faslis for which Pattas and Muchilikas are produced.

5. The third tenant holds Patta No. 433. In respect of his holding, the earliest Muchilika produced is for Fasli 1291.

6. These documents would show that in the case of two of the tenants, Vanpayir rates have been levied for over thirty years and in the case of the other for about twenty years. This does not mean that Vanpayir rates were not levied earlier. Defence witness No. 1 proves a number of old Jamabandi accounts, which show that cropwar assessment was levied in respect of lands in the village for a long series of years commencing so early as 1830. Defence witness No. 2 swears that the several cropwar rates deposed to by him are very old rates and have not been subject to any changes within his knowledge. In fact prosecution witness No. 1 speaking on behalf of himself and of the other tenants deposed that "we have been paying special rates for Vanpayir." The tenants object to those rates now merely because they have been advised that there has been a change in the law in their favour. But for this impression, this dispute would not have arisen either in these cases or in the numerous other cases which have recently come up before the Courts in this District. In fact it was accepted in the lower Court as an undisputed fact that the tenants were paying these special rates from time out of memory. If the fact of payment was in itself a matter of dispute, the landlord would have put into Court a much larger quantity of documentary evidence in support of his claim. Even as the evidence stands now, I think it establishes the landlord's claim. I would, therefore, return a finding in the affirmative on the issue remitted by the High Court.

These second appeals and the memorandum of objections coming on for final hearing after the return of the findings of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—We accept the lower Court's finding about Vanpayir. The decree will be varied accordingly.

In place of clause (b) in the District Court Pattah at page 24 of the printed papers, we direct clause 9 in the form of Patta approved by the Special Deputy Collector at page 20 to be inserted. In other respects the District Judge's Patta will stand for the suit Faslis. The parties will pay and receive proportionate costs throughout.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 6 (d)—Maintenance allowance, right to, whether can be transferred · Interest Act (XXXII of 1839), s. 1—Sum payable under written instrument—Interest, whether can be allowed.

An annuity by way of maintenance is alienable, whether by voluntary or involuntary transfer, and unless the annuity creates a charge upon immoveable property, an alienation of such annuity is not barred by the provisions of clause d of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act [p. 955, col. 1.]

Where a certain sum of money is payable by virtue of a written instrument at a certain time, the Court has authority under the Interest Act to allow interest, if it thinks fit, at a rate not exceeding the current rate of interest, from the time when the money is payable, and where there is no security a rate of one per cent. per mensem is not unreasonable. [p. 955, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the Appellate Decree of the Additional District Judge, Narsinghpur, decided on 8th December 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, Narsinghpur, decided on 31st August 1917.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. S. Kotwal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit brought to obtain arrears of an allowance the right to which originated in the following circumstances.

On the 14th November 1877 one Daryao and his son Murlidhar sold Mouza Nimach to Murlidhar, son of Sheocharan, and one Nandlal, stipulating in the conveyance as follows:—

"Rs. one hundred, British currency, have been settled for our maintenance. We will receive the same from you in the months of Kartik and Chait every year. Our right as well as that of our heirs shall remain intact. Whether the village may remain with you (vendees) or may be given to any one else on your behalf, our right will remain in force."

The plaintiffs are the sons of one Ganpat Potdar and sued on the 11th April 1917 to recover from the vendee Murlidhar and his brothers Debiprasad and Parmanand one-half of the allowance beginning with the instalment due in Chait Sambat 1968, and ending with that due in Chait Sambat 1974, the English dates given in the plaint being respectively the 13th April 1911 and the 7th April 1917. Interest at Re. 1 per cent. per mensem was claimed as damages and in default of payment sale of the village was asked for on the ground that the conveyance of 1877 created a charge thereon.

On the 11th August 1892 Murlidhar, son of Daryao, and his brother Mojilal mortgaged their right to receive the annuity of Rs. 100 to (1) Nathuram, (2) Deokaran, Bhagwandas and Gokalchand, owners of the shop styled Modiram-Gokalchand, and (3) Ganpat Potdar, a partner in the said firm.

On the 11th June 1903 Nathuram and his son Mulchand purchased from Murlidhar, Debiprasad and Permanand the right to receive the entire annuity for Rs. 1,075.

In 1907 Ganpat Potdar, alleging himself to be the owner of a half share in the mortgage of 1892, sued Murlidhar, Mojilal and Nathuram's son Mulchand to foreclose the mortgage in respect of one-half of the annuity. The matter was referred to arbitration and eventually Mulchand's right of redemption was foreclosed on the 28th September 1907 so far as a half share in the annuity was concerned.

The defendants in the present case denied that any charge was created by the conveyance of 1877 and pleaded that the right to the annuity was restricted in its enjoyment to the vendors of the village personally, and, therefore, could not be transferred by them. Liability to pay interest by way of damages was also denied.

The trial Judge held on the strength of clause (d), section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act, that the right to the annuity could not be transferred and that the conveyance of 1877 created no charge. The decision of 1907 in the mortgage suit was held not to be binding on the defendants and the claim was dismissed, the plaintiffs being regarded as having no title.

The plaintiffs having appealed to the District Court, the trial Judge's decree was reversed and the claim including interest allowed in full. The conveyance of 1877 was held to create an heritable charge on Mouza Nimach for the benefit of the vendors and their heirs, this decision being rested on Churaman v. Balli (1).

In second appeal the decision that a charge was created by the conveyance of 1877 is impeached. The case relied upon by the lower Appellate Court is certainly nowise in point. There the conveyance expressly made the annuity payable as malikana, and from the use of the words quoted it was inferred that the payment was to be an annual charge on the property sold. There are no such words in Exhibit P. 1 in the present case, and the respondents' learned Counsel supports the conclusion of the lower Appellate Court solely on the ground that in the circumstances the parties must have intended the creation of a charge. It is urged that the vendors would not have run the risk of losing the security of the village and that the inclusion of the stipulation for an annuity in the conveyance is of itself good reason for inferring an intention to create a charge. In my opinion the words of the document as above referred to suffice to negative the intention for which the respondents contend. The terms of the document contemplate payment by the vendees themselves, whether they retained or alienated the village, and there is no suggestion that the alienee would be liable. Such language is consistent only with the supposition that the vendors were content to make the vendees personally responsible for payment. The lower Appellate Court's direction that the village should be sold if the amount awarded to the plaintiff is not paid must, therefore, be set aside.

The next point pressed for the appellants is that the right of the vendors to receive an annuity was restricted in its enjoyment to them personally and could not, therefore, be transferred. Clause (d), section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act, is relied on, but it seems to me clear that no charge having been created, the vendors cannot be regarded as taking any interest in any specific property such as would make the clause applicable. The vendees merely undertook to pay a certain sum of money half yearly and, so far as I am aware, there is nothing in the nature of a maintenance which is necessarily incompatible with its alienation, whether by voluntary or involuntary transfer. In Singai Parmanandsao v. Baji Rao (2) it was held that land granted by way of maintenance is liable to attachment and sale in execution of a money decree obtained against the grantee, notwithstanding that the grant contains a prohibition against alienation. And in Harris v. Brown (3) the sale by a woman of an allowance of Rs 50 per mensem taken under a Will was recognized by their Lordships of the Privy Council as operative. There are, moreover, cases in which it has been held that an annuity the payment of which is a charge upon an estate is alienable and can be attached in execution of a decree: see Asad Ali v. Haider Ali (4). In the circumstances of the present case I have no doubt that the vendors' right to the annuity was transferable.

The third point pressed is that Ganpat Potdar is not shown to have been entitled to a half share in the mortgage of 1892. On this point I am satisfied from the judgment and decree in Civil Suit No. 19 of 1902 (Exhibits P. 6 and P. 7) and the evidence of Jagannath (P. W No. 2), who was Ganpat's partner in the firm of Modiram Gokalchand, that the said mortgage came to Ganpat's share when the partnership was dissolved. The suit of 1902 was brought by Deokaran, Bhagwandas and the aforesaid Jagannath against Ganpat to obtain dissolution of the partnership and the final decree passed on the 27th August 1906 gave to Ganpat all moveable and immoveable properties of the partnership in Mauza Paloha, where the present defendants-appellants live, including the debts due to the partnership by the debtors of that village.

The last ground of appeal relates to the claim for interest. It is said that no interest whatever should have been allowed. But this contention should clearly be overruled, inasmuch as the annuity is payable by virtue of a written instrument at certain times and the appellants admittedly made payments to Ganpat Potdar up to Sambat 1959 (1902 03). The Interest Act authorises the Court, if it thinks fit, to allow interest, at a rate not exceeding the current rate of interest, from the time when a certain sum which is payable by virtue of a written instrument at a certain time is payable, and where there is no security a rate of one per cent. per mensem cannot but be regarded as reasonable. The appellants did not plead before the trial Judge that any lower rate would be more appropriate.

Inasmuch as no charge can be recognized, the first seven instalments claimed in the plaint with the interest thereon must be disallowed as barred by limitation. The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be modified not only by deleting the direction for sale in default of payment, but also by reducing the amount payable to Rs. 150 for principal and Rs. 21-11 6 for interest up to the institution of the suit. From the date of the suit to the date of the Court's decree the ordinary Court rate of 8 annas per cent. per mensem will be allowed on Rs. 150, and thereafter the same rate will be payable on the aggregate amount adjudged until payment. Costs in all Courts will follow this result.

Decree modified.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XXI, r. 83—Execution of decree—Equity of redemption belonging to two brothers, attachment of—Permission to one brother to raise decretal amount by private sale—Brother not joining in sale, title of, whether affected—Suit to recover half share, maintainability of.

Where the equity of redemption in certain property belongs in equal shares to two divided brothers, and is attached in execution of a decree against both, and is ordered to be sold, the senior brother has no power to sell his brother's interest by virtue of permission obtained under Order XXI, rule 83, of the Civil Procedure Code to sell the equity of redemption privately.

In the case of such a sale the junior brother is entitled, on payment of half the purchase-money, to recover his share from the purchaser.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tinnevelly, in Appeal Suit No. 77 of 1917 (Appeal Suit No. 111 of 1917, District Court, Tinnevelly), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Ambasamudram, in Original Suit No 280 of 1915.

Mr. C V. Anantha Krishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the equity of redemption in certain property belonging in equal shares to two divided brothers was attached in execution of a decree against both and ordered to be sold in execution. The senior brother obtained leave to sell privately under Order XXI, rule 83 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The junior brother objected and the District Munsif, instead of cancelling the permission to sell privately, allowed the sale to go on, leaving the elder brother's right to sell his brother's interest undecided. On the authority of Danappa v. Yamnappa (1) we must hold that the senior brother had no power to sell his brother's interest. The property was purchased by the defendant, a prior mortgagee, from both the brothers, and who has since been in possession and is now sued by the younger brother for his half of the suit property.

At the date of the defendant's purchase the interests of both brothers had become liable to be sold for the decree debt by virtue of the attachment and order of sale. In these circumstances the defendant having by his purchase paid the money to free the plaintiff's share of the property from sale in execution of the decree, we do not think the plaintiff should be allowed to recover from him, except on payment of one-half of the price paid by the defendant with interest at 6 per cent. As regards the 8 cents, we think they belong to the defendant and that plaintiff has no interest in this. The decree will be modified accordingly, the final decree to be passed by the District Munsif. Parties to pay and receive proportionate costs in the High Court.

Lease, construction of—Printed portion in conflict with manuscript portion, effect of.

Where in a printed form of a lease there is a manuscript portion at the end of the printed portion, and there is a conflict between the printed portion and the manuscript portion, the manuscript portion must prevail over the printed portion. [p. 957, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Shahabad.

Messrs. Sheo Saran Lal and Sant Prasad, for the Appellant.

Messer. Kulwant Sahai and Nirsu Naryan Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT. This is an appeal on behalf of the tenant. The full amount of the rent has been deposited in Court, and the only question before me is whether the lower Appellate Court was right in holding that the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant interest, and secondly whether the mode of calculation in preparing the decree is the correct mode. This is the only question which I have to determine.

The lease is contained in a printed form but there is a manuscript portion at the end of the printed form. According to all canons of construction if there is any conflict between the written portion and the manuscript portion, the manuscript portion must prevail over the written portion. Now the written portion provides that the annual rent of Rs. 4,000 shall be realised by regular instalments detailed below, namely, in four instalments: Kuar 4 annas, Pous 4 annas, Chait 4 annas, and Jeth 4 annas. The lease then provides that in default of the payment of rent by instalments from year to year, interest at one per cent. per month or damages prescribed by law shall be realised from the defendant. This is, as I have said, in the written portion of the lease but the manuscript portion is as follows:—"Be it known that the rent of the lands settled shall have to be paid according to measurement after deducting the bal panchat lands." This condition is an important one, when we remember that the lands are subject to alluvion and dilluvion and that sometimes it is possible for the tenant to cultivate the whole area and sometimes it may be impossible for the tenant to cultivate any portion thereof. In my opinion the manuscript portion is the real contract between the parties, since there is a clear conflict between the printed portion and the manuscript portion. In my view the rent for three instalments becomes due as soon as the measurement is made, and the finding of the lower Appellate Court is that the measurement is made in Chait and then the tenant must pay for the three instalments in Chait and for the fourth instalment in Jeth. This, I think, is the view of the lower Appellate Court, which says: "It seems to me only reasonable to suppose in the absence of express agreement that the rent for the year falls due at the close of the year, by which time the tenant has had the use of the land for the period for which he agreed to pay and the measurement has been done." Mr. Sheo Saran Lal on behalf of the appellant relies on this portion very strongly and he says that it is a clear finding of fact by the lower Appellate Court that the rent does not become due till the end of the year, and as the suit, so far as the rent for 1323 was concerned, was brought before the end of the year, the plaintiff was clearly not entitled to any interest for the rent due in respect of 1323. But the learned District Judge proceeds to say as follows:—"I hold, therefore, that the rent was in arrear when the suit was instituted and that the suit is not premature." In my view the lower Appellate Court really intended to find that the rent for the three quarters became due after measurement and that, therefore, the suit was not premature. In any case this is a question that depends purely upon the construction of a single document upon which the rights of the parties depend, and, on a construction of that document, I come to the conclusion that the rent became due to the plaintiff in Chait for three quarters and in Jeth for the fourth quarter. Clearly, therefore, the suit was not premature.

The next question, therefore, is how is the interest to be calculated. The lower Appellate Court has held that the plaintiff is entitled to interest at $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The method of calculation in the decree is somewhat inartistic, if not incorrect. The proper method would be to calculate interest at $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. from the time when the rent actually fell in arrear, that is to say, the end of Chait and end of Jeth. I do not think that the lower Appellate Court really intended to come to a different conclusion but the decree has, in my opinion, been drawn up in a very inartistic manner. I would, therefore, send the case to the lower Appellate Court for drawing up the decree in accordance with my observations.

The appeals are disposed of in accordance with these observations. I make no order as to costs in this Court.

Case remanded.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 18, Sch. I, Art. 174—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 2—Fraud—Person kept from exercise of right—Extension of time—Decree-holder failing fraudulently to certify payment—Application for certification by judgment-debtor—Limitation.

Section 18 of the Limitation Act applies only to those cases in which a person has been kept from a knowledge of his rights, and has no application where he has been kept from the exercise of his right. So, where a decree-holder fraudulently promises to certify an adjustment out of Court and fails to do so, the judgment-debtor cannot claim the benefit of section 18, in order to extend the time for an application under rule 2 (2) of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, which, owing to the fraud of the decree-holder, is made after the time prescribed therefor.

Second appeal against the order of the Sub Divisional Court, Kyaukse, in Civil Regulation Suit No. 9 of 1915.

Mr. D. Dutt, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Mya U and Chaudhury, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In Civil Regular Suit No. 9 of 1915 in the Sub-Divisional Court, Kyaukse, the judgment-debtor, Maung Shwe Pi, obtained an order for record of an adjustment of the decree made out of Court.

The application falls within Order XXI, rule 2 (2), and ordinarily Article 174 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act would apply.

The application was not made within the 90 days allowed by that Article, but both Courts have found that section 18 of the Limitation Act applies, because the decree-holder had fraudulently promised to certify the adjustment and had failed to do so.

It was held, therefore, that the date from which limitation began to run was the date on which the judgment-debtor became aware that the decree-holder had acted fraudulently.

Neither of the Courts, however, seems to have considered with sufficient care the actual wording of section 18.

It is quite clear that the section only refers to cases where the person having a right to make an application has by means of fraud been kept from the knowledge of such right or the title on which it is founded.

In the present instance it is equally clear that the judgment-debtor was not kept by the alleged fraud from the knowledge of his right to make the application, but from the exercise of his right, which is quite a different matter.

Section 18 does not apply to the facts in the present appeal.

This was the view taken in Sayyid Muhammad Nur v. Ko Law Pan (1).

As in Biroo Gorain v. Jainurat Koer (2), the grievance of the applicant was that he had been kept by fraud from the exercise of his right to apply to have the adjustment certified, consequently in order to accede to his contention it would be necessary to substitute "from the exercise of such right" for the phrase "from the knowledge of such right" in section 18.

As pointed out in the Upper Burma case quoted, the judgment-debtor will be at liberty to institute a regular suit, if through the decree-holder's failure to certify adjustment, he should have to pay a second time.

The Madras cases cited do not affect the present case, as one was a suit for damages against the decree holder for failure to certify satisfaction and the other related to a petition to set aside a sale on the ground of the decree holder's fraud.

I know of no authority for allowing the judgment-debtor to prove an adjustment out of Court in contravention of Article 179 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act and Order XXI, rule 2.

The application was clearly time-barred and should have been dismissed.

The appeal will be allowed and the orders of the lower Court set aside and the application dismissed with all costs.

RAM NARAYAN SAHU—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s 5 Appeal filed beyond time—Appellant misled by practice of Court—Sufficient cause—Time spent in prosecuting petition for review, exclusion of—Diligence, proof of.

A petition under Order XXI, rule 90, of the Civil Procedure Code by a judgment-debtor was dismissed in default. He immediately instituted proceedings under Order IX, rule 9, of the Code asking that the case be reinstated and heard on the merits, but his application was rejected because, in the meantime, the High Court had held that Order IX, rule 9, did not apply to proceedings in execution of a decree, though before that decision the practice of the subordinate Courts had been to apply the provisions of the rule to proceedings in execution. The judgment debtor appealed to the High Court, and, under section 5 of the Limitation Act, applied that the time for appealing be extended:

Held, that, in the circumstances, the applicant was entitled to the extension, as he had been misled by the practice which had hitherto prevailed in the subordinate Courts but which had recently been held to be wrong. [p. 959, col 2.]

An appellant applying under section 5 of the Limitation Act ought ordinarily to be deemed to have acted with ordinary diligence when the whole period between the date of the decree appealed against and the date of presenting the appeal does not, after excluding the time spent in prosecuting with due diligence a proper application for review of judgment, exceed the period prescribed by law for presenting the appeal, and his appeal should, in such a case, be admitted under the section. [p 960, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Mozufferpore.

Mr. T. B. Sahai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Rai Guru Saran Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by the petitioner under section 5 of the Limitation Act, asking that the time for appealing from an order made in the course of execution proceedings dismissing his application under Order XXI, rule 90, of the Civil Procedure Code may be extended. The facts appear to be shortly these. The applicant was the judgment-debtor under a decree held by the opposite party. In execution of that decree for costs amounting to Rs. 1,300 certain property of the judgment-debtor was attached and advertised for sale. The petitioner thereupon filed a petition under Order XXI, rule 90, but owing to circumstances which he refers to in his present petition he was not present before the Subordinate Judge when the matter came up for hearing. He states in his petition that he had good grounds for not being present. However, owing to his absence his application under Order XXI, rule 90, was dismissed for default.

Immediately afterwards within a day or so he instituted proceedings under Order IX, rule 9, of the Civil Procedure Code asking that the case should be re instated and heard on the merits. That application came on for hearing on the 17th May 1919. In the meantime it appears that by a decision of a Full Bench of this Court it had been ruled that Order IX, rule 9, and other rules of the Civil Procedure Code which related to suits had no application to proceedings in execution and, therefore, the learned Judge rejected that application on the ground that he had no jurisdiction in the matter. Before the decision of this High Court referred to there can be no doubt that in the subordinate Courts Order IX, rule 9, and other rules of a similar kind had been applied to proceedings in execution and, therefore, the petitioner contends that owing to this practice which had hitherto prevailed to a large extent at all events in the Subordinate Courts he had been misled and lulled into security, because thinking that he could get all he wanted by an application under Order IX, rule 9, if he could show any merits, it was not necessary for him to file a memorandum of appeal from the order dismissing his application by which he was aggrieved.

Section 5 of the Limitation Act provides that any appeal or application for review of judgment or for leave to appeal or any other application to which the section may be made applicable by any enactment or rule for the time being in force, may be admitted after the period of limitation prescribed therefor, when the appellant or applicant satisfies the Court that he had sufficient cause for not preferring the appeal or making the application within such period. Therefore it would appear, prima facie, in the circumstances of this case that the applicant was misled by the practice which had hitherto prevailed in the subordinate Courts but which has recently been held to be wrong. Therefore he contends that under the provisions of section 5 of the Limitation Act indulgence ought to be extended to him because he made a bona fide mistake and he could not foresee the consequences. Therefore if the time which was occupied by the applicant in endeavouring to have his case re-instated under Order IX, rule 9, be deducted from the total period between the order appealed against and the filing of the memorandum of appeal, which was on the 26th June this year, he is clearly within time because on the 7th December his application under Order XXI, rule 90, was rejected and within a day or two of that he filed an application to have his previous application re-instated under Order IX, rule 9, and that was not heard until the 17th May 1919. Between the 17th May and the 2 th June is little more than a month, so that it would appear if an indulgence is granted under section 5 of the Limitation Act, that he was well within the time allowed for an appeal from such an order, which is 90 days.

It is contended, however, that he has not shown due diligence between the 17th May when his application was rejected and the 26th June when his memorandum of appeal was filed, and that no real reason has been assigned why he should have waited something rather over a month before filing his memorandum of appeal. This matter, however, has been dealt with more or less recently in a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Brij Indar Singh v. Lala Kanshi Ram (1), and the effect of that decision which is shortly described in the head-note is this: An appellant applying under section 5 of the Limitation Act ought ordinarily to be deemed to have acted with ordinary diligence, when the whole period between the date of the decree appealed against and the date of presenting the appeal does not, after excluding the time spent in prosecuting with due diligence a proper application for review of judgment, exceed the period prescribed by law for presenting the appeal, and his appeal should in such a case be admitted under the section. It would appear, therefore, that in this case, excluding the time which was occupied in taking proceedings which proved infructuous owing to a change in the law as laid down by this Court, the time occupied by the applicant in filing his memorandum of appeal was only something very little over a month. It does not seem to me that where he is in fact allowed 90 days and excluding the time mentioned only takes slightly over a month, it can be said in any view of the case that he has not acted with due diligence in seeking the only remedy which was open to him. Therefore I think this application, so far as that objection is concerned, ought to be admitted.

It was further contended on the authority of the case of Dwarka Singh v. Liyakat Ali Khan (2) that it is not always a sufficient cause for presenting an appeal after time that the appellant was unsuccessfully prosecuting an application for review of the judgment appealed against. I quite agree that the fact that there was such an application is not in all circumstances a reasonable cause for not having presented an appeal, but in the particular circumstances of the case mentioned it appears that the classes of cases in which the Court would hold that the prosecution of an application for review is not sufficient cause for extending the time for an appeal, are those classes of cases in which the review is really only a small matter and does not necessarily cover the same class of relief as the applicant would get by an appeal. Of course in such a case it is quite obvious that if he were intending to seek the larger remedy which he could not get by a review, then he ought to show due diligence, notwithstanding his review in filing his appeal. If he does not do so, it can hardly be said in such circumstances that the application for review was a good reason for not filing his memorandum of appeal. Or again where it is obvious that his review application cannot be heard and determined before the time limited for an appeal expires, then in such a class of cases possibly that fact may be taken into consideration in weighing all the circumstances and seeing whether in the discretion of the Court section 5 of the Limitation Act may be taken advantage of. In the particular case before us I do not think that any ground has been made out why the application should not be granted either on the ground of laches on the part of the applicant or on the ground that his application under Order IX, rule 9, would not really grant him at least as much relief as he would get by the present appeal. In my opinion this application should be granted and the time for appealing should be extended until the 26th June 1919.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 17—Amendment of plaint, when to be allowed—Cause of action, fresh, whether can be substituted.

A plaintiff ought not to be allowed to amend his plaint so as to substitute a plaint on a fresh cause of action or a separate cause of action for the plaint as originally framed.

Mr. S. Mukerjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. C. Chatterjee, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff sued for Rs. 270, alleged to be due on a promissory note for Rs. 125 executed about January 1914.

Subsequently he filed an amended plaint in which the cause of action was said to be on a mortgage for Rs. 125 of a house, bullocks and cart executed about the same date as the promissory note set forth in the original plaint.

The claim was for the same sum of Rs. 270.

Defendant denied executing any such mortgage or promissory note but admitted borrowing a distinct sum of Rs. 225 on a mortgage of land.

The Appellate Court set aside the decree against the second defendant on the ground that the amendment of the plaint involved a fresh cause of action based on defendant's admission that he had borrowed Rs. 225 on a mortgage.

I consider the view of the lower Appellate Court was correct.

It was not suggested that the words promissory note were used by mistake for mortgage.

Plaintiff could not be allowed to substitute a plaint on a separate cause of action for the plaint as originally framed.

The appeal, so far as second defendant is concerned, will be dismissed with costs.

The first and third defendants confessed judgment and did not appeal. The Court had, therefore, no jurisdiction to set aside the decree against them. They have not appeared to contest the present appeal. So far as they are concerned, the appeal must be allowed and plaintiff will be given a decree against them for Rs. 270 with costs on the uncontested scale in the Court of first instance.

As they did not appeal, appellant plaintiff is not entitled to costs against them in the first Appellate and this Court.

Messrs. N. C. Roy, Ragho Pershad and Shiveshwar Dayal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Parmeshwar Dayal, Harnandan Sahay and Jadubans Sahay, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal comes before us from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Shahabad, dated the 30th May 1917, and relates to a very small sum of costs awarded to the plaintiff in respect of a suit brought by the latter in the Court of the Munsif of Arrah on the 27th March 1916. In that suit the plaintiff claimed a declaration that a moiety of a house attached in execution of a decree, which had been obtained by defendant No. 1 against defendant No. 2 and advertised for sale, belonged to him and that the same was not liable for the decree of defendant No. 1.

Exhibit A, an order sheet of Execution Case No. 181 of 1915, shows that the house in question was advertised for sale to be held on the 3rd April 1916. After filing the suit the plaintiff obtained an order from the Court on 4th April directing the other half of the property, which was not claimed by the plaintiff, to be sold first and accordingly half the share in the house belonging to defendant No. 2 was sold on the 6th April 1916 and fetched a value which entirely satisfied the decree of the defendant No. 1. There was, therefore, no necessity of selling the share claimed by the plaintiff in the suit.

Accordingly, on the 27th April, defendant No. 1 filed a written statement stating that at that time no decree was under execution and that the property in suit, namely, half the house, was not at all advertised for sale in execution of any decree and hence the plaintiff's suit was premature and ought to be dismissed. The case was adjourned to 6th May for the plaintiff to prove service of summons upon defendant No. 2.

On the 6th May the defendant No. 2 took time to file a written statement but did not do so, nor did he since then appear in the suit.

The following issues were framed for trial as between the plaintiff and the defendant No. 1:—

(1) Has there been any attachment of the plaintiff's share in Execution Case No. 181 of 1916? If so, has the plaintiff any valid cause of action to bring the suit?

(2) Is the suit premature?

(3) To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?

But when the case was ultimately taken up on the 2nd January 1917, the Court discovered that there was no necessity of trying any of the aforesaid issues framed in the case, inasmuch as the share claimed by the plaintiff was not sold at all and the decree of defendant No. 1 was long before satisfied by the sale of the property of defendant No. 2 in Execution Case No. 181. The Court, therefore, went into the question of costs only, as to which it held that "this question should have been decided long ago had not the plaintiff taken several adjournments; and so a good many unnecessary costs could have been avoided. The plaintiff could have besides had this sale stayed by the simpler process of filing a claim in the execution case instead of filing a regular suit, and could have got this remedy by spending only a rupee if he liked.....Hence I think that the plaintiff is not entitled to the full Court fees he has spent as he did not try for the simpler procedure at first. In all fairness I think further that it will serve the ends of justice fully if we set off the costs of the defendant as awarded on 28th July 1916 with the costs of the plaintiff and hold that the two have been satisfied by being thus set off. If the plaintiff was harassed by the 1st attachment, the defendant too has been sufficiently harassed in return by the adjournments and subsequent delays caused by the plaintiff."

As the costs of both the parties were, as above indicated, set off one against the other, no decree for costs was prepared by the Munsif.

Against this order of the Munsif the plaintiff appealed to the District Judge and the appeal was ultimately heard by Mr. Abdul Jabbar, Subordinate Judge. By his decision of the 30th of May the Subordinate Judge upset the order of the Munsif and held that the plaintiff was entitled to costs incurred by him in both the Courts, except that he should get Pleader's fee as in an ex parte suit. Defendant No. 1 has, therefore, appealed to this Court.

A preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that no second appeal lay to this Court against the order of the lower Appellate Court. Reference has been made to section 35 of the Code of Civil Procedure in support of this contention. That section gives full discretion to the Court in the matter of awarding costs in a suit. That discretion was exercised by the Munsif, who had the seizin of the case, in favour of the appellant, and if the contention of the respondent were good his appeal to the Court below was incompetent. The respondent cannot also rely upon clause (2) of section 35, which embodies the principle that a successful litigant is entitled to his costs, inasmuch as the suit was "disposed of without adjudicating upon the merits," as neither party pressed for that before the Munsif. There was no decision in the suit upon the merits of the case and the question to be decided by the trying Court related only to the costs incurred in the suit. The Court in determining the costs had to exercise the judicial discretion based upon certain principles and as such the order of the Munsif was appealable to the lower Appellate Court. Similarly, the order of the latter as to costs involves matters of principle and as such is subject to second appeal to this Court. This contention of the respondent is, therefore, overruled.

I agree with the Court below that the defendant No. 1 having attached the entire house, it was open to the plaintiff to bring the suit to have it declared that half the share in the house belonged to him and was in his possession and that the same was not liable to be attached or sold in execution of the decree of defendant No. 1 against defendant No. 2. The defendant No. 1 was, therefore, liable to the costs incurred by the plaintiff in instituting the suit.

The plaintiff obtained an order on the 4th of April that the share of defendant No. 2 in the moiety of the house should be sold first and that on the 6th of April that share, being sold, fetched a price whereby the entire decree was satisfied and the sale was confirmed on the 10th June. The defendant No. 1 in the written statement of the 27th April clearly stated that the decretal amount was realised by the auction-sale of half the share of the disputed property and that there was no necessity for the determination of the plaintiff's right. The issues in the case did not at all question the right of the plaintiff in the house, and the only question raised was whether the plaintiff had any cause of action on account of the result of the Execution Case No. 181 of 1916. It is, therefore, inconceivable why after this the plaintiff persisted in going to the trial of the case and not withdrawing from the suit. He went to the length of applying to the District Judge for the transfer of the case from the file of the Munsif and thus delayed the disposal of it and when the case came back from the District Judge, the plaintiff went on taking adjournment after adjournment although the defendant was ready, and the Munsif was perfectly right in holding that the question as to the costs could have been determined long before if the plaintiff had not taken these adjournments. The plaintiff is, therefore, responsible for the delay in the disposal of the case and he is thus not entitled to any costs subsequent to the filing of the written statement by the defendant. I may go further and hold that the Court itself ought to have disposed of the case at the time when the issues were framed in the case, inasmuch as it was clear to the Court at that time that the decree of the defendant No. 1 was satisfied and that the cause of action ceased to exist, particularly so when both the present Title Suit No. 67 and the Execution Case No. 181 were going on simultaneously in the very Court and the same Munsif by his order of the 4th April directed that the plaintiff's share was not to be sold in the first instance and on that very day sold the other half of the property whereby the entire decree was satisfied. At least at the time when the issues were framed the Court was cognizant of the facts of both the cases and ought to have decided the title suit without so many adjournments extending over eight months. The adjournments appear to have been made automatically and the Munsif does not appear to have exercised his mind as to their reasonableness. The matter involved in this case is in itself not of great value, but is a sample of the procedure that is adopted by the Courts below in adjourning cases as a matter of course from month to month without looking into the requirements of the cases and the possibility of their being disposed of on the dates fixed for their hearing. Much of the harassment to the parties and the costs incurred in the case could have been saved if the Munsif were alive to what he was doing.

Now, whether the delay in the disposal of the case was due to the indifference of the Court or to the laches of the plaintiff, it is certain that the defendant is not liable for the costs incurred by the plaintiff on the adjourned dates, for he (the defendant) was ready on all the dates.

The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to the costs of the suit incurred by him up to the time the issues were framed. Out of the costs, thus incurred, Rs. 6, which was due to defendant No. 1 from the plaintiff as costs of adjournment awarded by the Court to the latter by its order of the 28th July 1916, should be deducted. The plaintiff will be entitled to the balance of the costs incurred in the first Court and the decree of the Munsif is, therefore, varied accordingly.

The plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to prefer an appeal to the lower Appellate Court for recovery of the balance and the costs of the lower Appellate Court will be assessed upon the sum that the plaintiff was entitled to get in the Munsif's Court. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is also varied to that extent.

The appeal partially succeeds in this Court. Each party will, therefore, bear the costs of this appeal in proportion of its Costs. A decree will be prepared by this Court incorporating the costs of both the Courts below according to the aforesaid directions.

Appeal partly accepted.

Where the averments in a plaint are not sufficiently precise, it is open to the defendant to apply for particulars under Order VI, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code, and, if such application is not made, he cannot, in second appeal, be permitted to refer to the matter. [p. 966, col. 2.]

In all cases relating to money-lending transactions, the Court will relieve the debtor by reducing the rate of interest only when it is satisfied that the lender was in a position to dominate the will of the borrower, and that the "bargain" was unconscionable within the meaning of section 16 of the Contract Act; but where neither of these elements is pleaded, it is not open to the Court to give relief to the defendant on the ground of undue influence. [p. 967, cols. 1 & 2.]

A member of a joint Mitakshara family is entitled to use the family funds in repelling a criminal charge made against him. [p. 966, col. 1.]

The karta of a joint family has undoubted power to alienate joint family property for a justifying family necessity, if the other members of the coparcenary assent to the transaction. An assent given by a son to a mortgage by his father subsequently to its completion is not, in any sense, a ratification of what was done by his father, but is presumptive proof of a justifying family necessity. [p. 969, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where a Hindu father raised a loan agreeing to pay interest at 3 per cent. per month with quarterly rests, and the transaction was assented to by his son, and there was no evidence that his consent was not a free consent, or that he did not give his consent with knowledge of actual facts of a family necessity justifying the raising of a loan on such onerous terms:

Held, that the rate of interest was not a penal rate, and that the lender was entitled to recover interest at the rate agreed upon. [p. 970, col. 1.]

In dealing with cases under the Hindu Law it is always dangerous to employ technical terms of English Law. [p. 969, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the appellants to enforce a mortgage-bond executed by one Haricharan Mahto. Haricharan is now dead, and is represented in this action by defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Defendants Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6 and 8 are the sons of one Cheddami Lal, and they hold a mortgage on some of the properties included in the plaintiffs' mortgage, and the question between the plaintiffs and these defendants is whether the plaintiffs' document is entitled to priority over the document of these defendants. A similar question arises between the plaintiffs and defendant No. 9.

The plaintiffs' case is that Haricharan was the karta of the joint family and, as such karta, he borrowed from the plaintiffs Rs. 1,000 on the 16th July 1903 for the necessary expenses of the joint family, agreeing to pay interest thereon at 36 per cent. per annum with quarterly rests, and giving as security for the loan five specific items of properties. On the date on which they commenced the action, Rs. 50,158-12-7 had become due to them on the mortgage-bond. They, however, relinquished their claim to Rs. 18,158-12-7, and sought to recover Rs. 32,000 by the suit which they instituted on the 6th of October 1913.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 defended the suit on various grounds, but the substantial defences which they put forward were two in number, namely, first, that there was no legal necessity for the loan and that, therefore, the joint family property was not liable for it, and, secondly, that the contract as to interest and compound interest was hard and unconscionable and could not be given effect to by any Court.

Defendants Nos. 3 to 9 also entered appearance and they claimed to be prior mortgagees.

The learned Subordinate Judge who tried the case came to the conclusion that there was a legal necessity for the loan but that the stipulation as to interest was "penal." In the result, he gave a mortgage decree to the plaintiffs for Rs. 1,000 with simple interest at 12 per cent. per annum from 16th July 1903 up to the date of suit. He further gave the plaintiffs "furture interest" at six per cent. per annum. So far as defendants Nos. 3 to 8 are concerned, he held that they were prior mortgagees and he directed that properties Nos. 3 and 4, which were the subject-matter of the mortgage in favour of defendants Nos. 3 to 8, should be sold subject to that mortgage. So far as defendant No. 9 is concerned, he came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs must satisfy his claim before they can be allowed to sell property No. 2, which was mortgaged to defendant No. 9 and which defendant No. 9 has purchased in execution of his mortgage decree.

The plaintiffs appeal, and the substantial points that have been argued on their behalf are:—

First, that, so far as defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are concerned, the Court below had no power to make a new contract for the parties and reduce the rate of interest from thirty-six per cent., with quarterly rests to twelve per cent. secondly, that, so far as defendant Nos. 3 to 8 are concerned, these defendants are not entitled to priority over them, and thirdly, that so far as defendant No. 9 is concerned, that defendant is not entitled to priority over them and that, in any event, if they have to satisfy the claim of defendant No. 9, they are entitled to add that to their claim against defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have filed a cross-objection to the decree passed by the Court below, and the point that has been argued on their behalf at great length by Mr. Manuk is that the plaintiffs have not proved any legal necessity for the loan and that, therefore, the Court below should have dismissed the suit altogether.

Defendants Nos. 3 to 6 and 8 also object to the decree in so far as it has not awarded them costs against the plaintiffs.

Lastly, defendant No. 9 objects to the decree in so far as it has given an opportunity to the plaintiffs to redeem his mortgage.

It will be convenient first to deal with the cross-objection filed on behalf of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that there was legal necessity for the loan. His finding on this issue is as follows:—"It appears that there was a criminal case of rioting against the executant and others and the case lasted from 29th June 1903 to 14th December 1903.

The executant had to borrow this money to defend himself. I consider that this was a debt for legal necessity." The first point taken on behalf of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 by Mr. Manuk, but not very strenuously pressed, is that a person is not entitled to defend himself at the cost of the joint family property. I do not think that it is possible to lay down a rule which would apply to all cases, but I am of opinion that a member of a joint Mitakshara family is entitled to use the family funds for the purpose of repelling a false criminal charge against him. It must be remembered that a member of a joint Mitakshara family has no separate funds of his own, and if it were the law that he is not entitled to defend himself against a false criminal charge, it would be impossible for him to defend himself at all. In this case, as a result of his defence, Haricharan was acquitted by the Criminal Court. I hold, therefore, that in this case Haricharan was entitled to raise a loan for the purpose of defending himself.

Mr. Manuk next contends that there is no evidence that the loan was raised for the purpose of the criminal case, and he relies, first, on the mortgage bond itself, secondly, on the averment of legal necessity in the plaint, and thirdly, on the evidence in the case.

So far as the bond is concerned, Mr. Manuk's argument is that there is no recital that the money was required for the criminal case. The actual recital in the bond is, "At present I, the executant, badly require Rs. 1,000 more for impending necessary house-keeping expenses, etc.", and the criticism directed against this recital is that he does not say that he requires the money for meeting a criminal charge against him. In my view, legal necessity must in each case be established by evidence, and it is not necessary that the bond should contain a recital of the legal necessity. See Womesh Chunder Sircar v. Digumburee Dossee (1). But in this case there is a recital of legal necessity and, in my opinion, the recital amply covers the legal necessity sought to be proved.

Mr. Manuk's criticism regarding the averment in the plaint is equally unsubstantial. The translation of the fourth paragraph of the plaint is not quite accurate. It should run as follows: "That in this capacity as head and karta of the joint family, Haricharan Mahto borrowed from plaintiff No. 1 and Babu Ghansayam Das Rs. 1,000 of the Emperor's coins, bearing interest at Rs. 3 per cent. per mensem, under a registered bond, dated 16th July 1903, the basis of the suit, executed and delivered by him, for the necessary expenses of the joint family, and, taking the amount, he spent it in meeting the requirements of his joint family." Mr. Manuk says that the averment should have been more precise and should have given him notice as to the exact necessity for which the money was borrowed. Order VI, rule 2, of the Code lays down what every pleading shall contain. "Every pleading shall contain, and contain only, a statement in a concise form of the material facts, on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence as the case may be, but not the evidence by which they are to be proved." The "material fact" in this case upon which the plaintiffs rely for their claim is that the money was borrowed for the necessary expenses of the joint family. That material fact is pleaded. The evidence of the legal necessity is, of course, the criminal case against the karta of the family for which money was required. That is not pleaded; and Mr. Manuk's criticism is that the evidence in this case should have been pleaded. I do not agree with this contention at all. If indeed the defendants were embarrassed by the form of the averment of legal necessity in the plaint, it was open to them to apply for particulars under Order VI, rule 5, of the Code. That application was not made by them, and, in my view, they cannot be permitted now to argue that legal necessity has not been pleaded in this case with sufficient clearness.

I now come to the actual evidence of legal necessity. Exhibit 7 is the order-sheet of the criminal case, and it shows that a warrant was issued on, amongst others, Haricharan on the 19th June 1903 and that Haricharan was acquitted on the 9th December 1903. The mortgage-bond in suit was executed on the 16th July 1903. The account book produced by the plaintiffs shows that Rs. 684 out of the money borrowed was actually paid in Court. There is, therefore, an inherent probability in the story set up by the defendants, especially when it is remembered that Haricharan was always in need of money. Mr. Manuk has critically examined the evidence of the witnesses examined on behalf of the plaintiffs, and has invited us to reject their evidence. In order to test the evidence which has been adduced in this case, we are bound to take into consideration the undoubted fact that Haricharan was always in need of money, as the several bonds admittedly executed by Haricharan and produced in this case amply prove. Secondly, we are bound to take into consideration the fact that at that time a criminal case was pending against Haricharan. Lastly, there is a clear admission by defendant No. 1 in Exhibits 5 and 6 that he is liable in respect of the mortgage-bond executed by his father on the 16th July 1903. Having anxiously considered all the evidence in this case, I am of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge correctly decided this issue in favour of the plaintiffs. I would, therefore, dismiss the cross-objection filed on behalf of defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

I now come to the plaintiffs' appeal. The first point taken on behalf of the appellants is that the learned Subordinate Judge should not have rejected the plaintiffs' claim for interest. The learned Subordinate Judge considered that the agreement to pay interest at 3 per cent. per month with quarterly rests was "penal" and, being of opinion that he was at liberty to make a new contract between the parties, he allowed simple interest at one per cent per annum. I am of opinion that the view expressed by the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be supported at all. It will be noticed that the learned Subordinate Judge does not come to the conclusion that the lenders were in a position to dominate the will of Haricharan; in fact, it would not be open to him to consider a case of undue influence since none was pleaded. When all the cases relating to moneylending transactions are examined, it will appear that the Court has relieved the debtor by reducing the rate of interest only when it has been satisfied that the lender was in a position to dominate the will of the borrower and that the "bargain" was unconscionable within the meaning of section 16 of the Contract Act. It is only the concurrence of these two elements that can justify the Court in granting relief to the borrower. One of the elements necessary to bring the case within section 16 of the Indian Contract Act was not pleaded in this case, nor has it been found in favour of the defendants by the learned Subordinate Judge. In my view, therefore, it was not open to him to give relief to the defendants on the ground assigned by him.

Mr. Manuk, however, contends that the matter is really concluded by the latest decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Nawab Nazir Begam v. Rao Raghunath (2). In that case it was held by the Judicial Committee that it is incumbent on those who support a mortgage to show not only that there was necessity to borrow but that it was not unreasonable to borrow at a high rate of interest and, if it is not shown that there was necessity to borrow at that high rate of interest, that rate cannot stand. Mr. Manuk argues that, assuming the plaintiffs have shown that there was necessity to borrow the money, they have not shown that there was any necessity to borrow the money at the rate of 3 per cent. per month with quarterly rests and that, therefore, he is entitled to ask the Court to reduce the rate of interest.

In the case cited by Mr. Manuk, the defendants by their written statement specifically denied that there was any necessity to borrow the money at the rate of interest mentioned in the bond. This will appear from the judgment of the Allahabad High Court reported as Rao Raghunath Singh v. Nazir Begam (3). With reference to this issue, specifically raised by the defendants, the High Court said as follows: "No evidence has been given on the point on behalf of the plaintiff, and it has not been shown, that Raonarain Singh could not raise a loan of Rs. 398 at a lower rate of interest."

Mr. Manuk, however, argues that whatever issue the defendants in that case may have raised by their written statement, the Judicial Committee proceeded on the document itself apart from any special plea put forward on behalf of the defendants. With this contention I do not agree. In the course of their judgment, the Judicial Committee said as follows: "In the written statement filed on behalf of the defendants, one of the points taken was that the property mortgaged was ancestral property, and that there was no legal necessity to execute the document sued upon." Stopping here for a moment, it is quite clear that the Judicial Committee did consider the written statement filed on behalf of the defendants. It could only be for the purpose of considering whether it was open to the defendants to argue that there was no legal necessity to borrow the money at the rate of interest mentioned in the bond. The Judicial Committee proceeded to say as follows: "In the view which the High Court took of this plea, a view from which their Lordships see no reason to differ, it made it open for the defendants to contend that though the necessity for borrowing the principal sum was accepted, there was no necessity to borrow on the very onerous terms of this mortgage."

The question, therefore, arises, what is the plea of the defendants in this case, and is it open to them to argue on their written statement that there was no necessity to borrow money on the very onerous terms of this mortgage? In the sixth paragraph of the written statement, defendant No. 1 says: "that the necessities mentioned in the bond in suit are wrong and baseless. This defendant's father never took a shell from the plaintiffs for the requirements and the benefit of the family, nor was there any necessity for the same." I am clearly of opinion that in this paragraph the defendant is putting in issue the question whether there was any necessity for the loan at all, and not the question whether there was any necessity to raise the loan on such onerous terms. Any doubt that there might be, as to the precise meaning of this paragraph, is removed as soon as we come to the tenth paragraph of the written statement; which contains the defendant's special plea as to interest. He objects to the rate of interest mentioned in the bond as it is by way of penalty, and it is this plea which the learned Subordinate Judge has tried. I am of opinion that it is not open to the defendants to argue on their written statement that, assuming there was legal necessity for the loan itself, there was no legal necessity for raising the loan on such onerous terms. The question of necessity is essentially a question of fact. That question was not raised by the defendants in their written statement. It was not put forward before the learned Subordinate Judge and was not considered by him. I hold, therefore, that this question does not arise before us for our consideration.

If, however, the question is open to us for our consideration, I am of opinion that the subsequent consent of defendant No. 1 is sufficient to validate the transaction so as to bind both defendants Nos. 1 and 2. I have already referred to the consent of defendant No. 1 as contained in Exhibits 5 and 6, but it is necessary to deal with this matter a little more in detail. It appears that on the 19th December 1903, Haricharan executed another mortgage-bond in favour of the plaintiffs and that the plaintiffs instituted a suit against Haricharn and his son, defendant No. 1, to enforce that mortgage-bond against them. The sum claimed in that suit was Rs. 12,771-9-6. Haricharan died soon after the institution of the suit, and his son, who is defendant No. 1 in this suit, promptly settled the matter with the plaintiffs. The terms of settlement were as follows: the plaintiffs would give up Rs. 3,596-9-6 and the costs of the suit, the defendant would sell to the plaintiffs a property of the value of Rs. 8,000 and pay in cash to the plaintiffs Rs. 1,175, for which time was given to the defendant till Baisakh 1318. This arrangement was embodied in a consent decree passed by the Court on the 12th February 1911 (Exhibit 6), and was partly carried out by the execution of a sale-deed dated the 10th February 1911 (Exhibit 5).

The consent decree upon which reliance is placed by Mr. Kulwant Sahay on behalf of the appellants provides as follows: "It is prayed that a decree may be awarded for Rs. 1,175 with interest thereon at 1 per cent. per mensem till the date of realization. Besides the amount claimed, Rs. 1,000, as principal, and interest and compound interest due under the mortgage-bond, dated 16th July 1903, executed by Haricharan Mahto is due from me under the bond. Only Rs. 1,487, out of interest and compound interest entered on the back of the bond, has been realized. The bond is allowed to stand good as before, i. e., the principal, interest and compound interest will remain due from me." In the sale-deed, there is a passage upon which Mr. Kulwant Sahay relies and which runs as follows: "Be it known that the bond, dated 16th July 1903, stands good as before, after payment of Rs. 1,000 as principal besides interest and compound interest."

There is a clear admission of liability on the part of defendant No. 1 in respect not only of the principal sum covered by the bond of 16th July 1903 but in respect also of the interest and compound interest, and Mr. Kulwant Sahay strongly argues that the subsequent assent on the part of defendant No. 1 validates the transaction so far as interest is concerned. Mr. Manuk contests this proposition of law and he relies upon the case of Kandasami Asari v. Somaskunta Ela Nidhi Ltd. (4) for the proposition that the manager of a joint family is not in any sense the agent of the family and that consequently no ratification of his act by the other members of the co parcenary is possible. His argument is that an alienation by the karta of the joint family without necessity is void in its inception and that consequently no amount of ratification will validate that which is void from the beginning.

It is, in my opinion, always dangerous to employ technical terms of English Law in dealing with cases under the Hindu Law. The question is not whether the karta of a joint family is the agent of the family, but what are his powers. He has undoubtd power to alienate joint family property for a justifying family necessity and the law will presume that there was a justifying family necessity, if the other members of the co-parcenary have assented to the transaction. In my opinion the subsequent "assent" of defendant No. 1 is not in any sense a ratification of what was done by his father involving a discussion of Keighley, Maxsted & Co. v. Durant (5), but is presumptive proof of a justifying family necessity. It is, of course, open to defendant No. 1 to show that his consent was not a free consent, or that he did not give his consent with knowledge of actual facts, but, in the absence of such evidence, his assent is proof of a family necessity justifying the raising of the loan on such onerous terms.

Defendant No. 1 was aware of the difficulty in his way created by Exhibits 4 and 5, and, therefore, in the eleventh paragraph of his written statement he pleaded that he was only 16 years of age when his signature to the two documents was taken, and that his signature was in fact procured by the deception practised on him by his uncle who acted in collusion with the plaintiffs. As regards his plea of minority, this is obviously false, as he entered appearance in the previous litigation and never suggested that he was a minor and could only be sued as such. As regards his plea of fraud, there is no evidence in support of it, except his own evidence which I am wholly unable to accept.

Mr. Manuk, however, strongly relies upon certain admitted facts. He says that Haricharan died on the 19th January, and Exhibits 4 and 5 are dated the 10th and 11th February respectively. The argument is that defendant No. 1, who, whether he was a minor or not, was undoubtedly of a tender age, was incapable so soon after his father's death of transacting a business of this nature, and Mr. Manuk points out that his assent to the transaction of the 16th July 1903 is wholly out of place in a transaction connected with a subsequent mortgage bond. The argument is not without force, but, having considered the evidence very carefully, I am unable to accept it. It seems to me that it is quite possible that the plaintiffs made a concession to the defendant in order to procure his assent to the earlier transaction, but, without speculating in the matter at all, it is sufficient to say that a plea of undue influence must be supported by evidence which has not been produced in this case. If it were necessary, therefore, to come to a conclusion on the question whether there was any necessity to raise the loan on such onerous terms, it would be sufficient to say that the subsequent assent of defendant No. 1 to the transaction is evidence of such necessity, which evidence has not been rebutted in any way by defendant No. 1. So far as defendant No. 2 is concerned, he was not in existence either on the date when the transaction took place or on the date when his father, defendant No. 1, assented to that transaction. Therefore, the question does not arise so far as he is concerned.

I am of opinion, therefore, that the plaintiffs are entitled to interest at 3 per cent. per mensem with quarterly rests from the date of the execution of the bond up to the date which we shall fix for payment. They are also entitled to interest at 6 per cent. per annum on the decretal amount from the date fixed for payment up to the date of realization.

The next question is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to sell properties Nos. 3 and 4 mentioned in the mortgage bond free from the mortgage of defendants Nos. 3 to 6 and 8. These defendants are the heirs of one Chedami, who advanced Rs. 8,000 to Haricharan on the 29th July 1904 on the security of properties Nos. 3 and 4. Their case is that this money went to pay off Ghanshyam whose mortgage was dated the 12th January 1903. They say that they are entitled to be subrogated to the securities held by Ghanshyam and that, therefore, so far as these properties are concerned, they are entitled to priority over the plaintiffs.

There is no doubt that the intention of the parties was that the security created in favour of Ghansyam Das on the 12th January 1903 should be kept alive and not extinguished by the transaction of the 29th July 1904. This is conceded by Mr. Kulwant Sahay, but he argues that subrogation could only be by redemption, and that in this case the money found by Chedami Lal did not completely pay off Ghansyam Das and that consequently Chedami Lal was not entitled to be subrogated to the securities held by Ghansyam Das. This argument is based on the following facts which are admitted. The money actually due to Ghansyam Das on the foot of the mortgage dated the 12th January 1903 was Rs. 9,430. Chedami Lal actually paid Rs. 7,830 to Ghanshyam Das towards the satisfaction of the mortgage, and, for the balance due under the bond, Haricharan executed a hundi in favour of Ghansyam Das. Mr. Kulwant Sahay's argument is that at the time when Chedami Lal actually paid the money to Ghansayam Das, the mortgage security in favour of Ghansyam Das still remained in force and that Chedami Lal cannot get the benefit of a payment subsequently made by Haricharan. With this argument I do not agree. The transaction is one and entire and whether the money found by Chedami was paid to Ghanshyam Das before the hundi was executed by Haricharan or not, the result of the transaction was that the debt due to Ghansyam Das was completely wiped out. The bond was made over by Ghansyam Das to Chedami Lal and has been produced in the case by defendants Nos. 3 to 6 and 8. The case reported as Swaminatha Pillai v. Krishna Iyer (6) is directly in point. I hold that the learned Subordinate Judge rightly decided this issue in favour of defendants Nos. 3 to 6 and 8.

These defendants have filed a cross-objection on the question of costs. Costs are entirely at the discretion of the Court, and I am unable to say that the learned Subordinate Judge has exercised his discretion unreasonably. I would dismiss the cross objection filed on behalf of defendants Nos. 3 to 6 and 8.

There only remains the question as between the plaintiffs and defendant No. 9. The learned Subordinate Judge has allowed the plaintiffs to redeem the mortgage in favour of defendant No. 9. Both parties are dissatisfied with this portion of the decree. The plaintiffs contend that they are entitled to priority over defendant No. 9 and that, in any case, if they are compelled to redeem defendant No. 9, they are entitled to add what they have to pay to defendant No. 9 to their claim against defendants Nos. 1 and 2. It appears that the plaintiffs were parties to the suit instituted by defendant No. 9 against defendant No. 1. It was established in that litigation that so far as plaintiff No. 2 is concerned, defendant No. 9's security was prior to that of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs had an opportunity in that litigation to redeem defendant No. 9, but they did not avail themselves of that opportunity. The property was put up for sale and was purchased by defendant No. 9. It seems to me that the plaintiffs have lost their right of redemption for ever and that the purchase made by defendant No. 9 cannot now be disturbed. The plaintiffs' contention on this point must accordingly be overruled and the cross-objection filed by defendant No. 9 must be allowed.

I would accordingly allow this appeal, set aside the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge and, in lieu thereof, pass the following decree. Let an account be taken of what will be due to the plaintiffs under and by virtue of the mortgage dated the 16th July 1903 in the fourth paragraph of the plaint mentioned and for their costs in this Court and in the Court below six months from the date hereof; and it is ordered that upon the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 or either of them paying into Court what shall be found to be due to them on such account within six months from the date hereof, the plaintiffs do deliver up to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 or to such person as they appoint all documents in their possession or power relating to the mortgaged properties and do, if so required, retransfer the properties to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 free from the mortgage and from all encumbrances created by the plaintiffs or any persons claiming under them, but that in default of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 or any of them paying the plaintiffs what shall be found due to them as aforesaid by the time aforesaid, the properties mortgaged to the plaintiffs and specified in the mortgage bond, save and except property No. 2, namely, Chainpur, Sheikpur, Brohmpur being Touzi No. 28/5 or sufficient portion thereof be sold, but that the properties Nos. 3 and 4, namely, Mouza Kantichak, Pargana Haveli Azimabad, being Touzi No. 151/1 and Mouza Sobolpur Chipura, Pergana Fulwari, being Touzi No. 251, be sold subject to the mortgage dated the 29th July 1904 in favour of Chedami Lal, and that the proceeds of the sale (after defraying thereout the expenses of the sale) be paid into Court and applied in payment of what is due to the plaintiffs as aforesaid together with subsequent interest at six per cent. per annum and subsequent costs, and that the balance, if any, be paid to defendants Nos. 1 and 2. It is further ordered that defendant No. 9 do get his costs of this appeal from the appellants.

COUTTS, J.—I agree.

ORIGINAL SIDE APPEALS NOS. 31 AND 32 OF 1918.

March 13, 1919.

Present:—Sir John Wallis, KT., Chief Justice, and Justice Sir William Ayling, KT.

A. MADURAI CHETTY AND ANOTHER—APPELLANTS

T. BABU SAHEB AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Vendor and purchaser—Agreement to sell—Subsequent discovery of defect in vendor's title—Mortgage created by third party before date of agreement—Enquiry, claim for, by purchaser before completing sale—Rescission by vendor, legality of—Specific performance and enquiry into title, right of purchaser to—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 39, 64—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 12, 18, 35.

A purchaser, under a contract of sale, is entitled to a good and marketable title. If the title is found to be doubtful, so as to require investigation, he cannot be compelled either to rescind the contract or to accept without investigation, the doubtful title. He may sue for specific performance of the contract and ask for an enquiry into the title by the result of which he will be bound. [p. 974, col. 1.]

E. entered into an agreement to sell her house to Oosman Sait & Co. for consideration, towards which the latter paid her Rs. 500 as earnest-money. One of the conditions was, that the sale was subject to good title and the advance was to be refunded if the title was found not to be in order. Before the date fixed for completion of the sale, the purchasers discovered that the vendor's grandson, in whose favour the vendor had created an estate in remainder, had, prior to the date of the agreement created mortgages on the house. On the vendor's requiring the purchasers to complete the purchase, the latter replied that they deferred performance pending an enquiry into the mortgages. Thereupon the vendor rescinded the contract, stating that the mortgagor had no title and offered to indemnify. Both parties brought suits, the purchasers for specific performance and the vendor for rescission of the contract:

Held, (1) that the vendor was not justified in rescinding the contract, or in calling on the purchasers to complete the contract within a stated time without further investigation; [p. 974, col. 2.]

(2) that the purchasers were entitled to sue for specific performance and an enquiry with a view to clearing up the question of title. [p. 974, col. 2.]

Bindeshri Prasad v. Mahant Jairam, 14 I. A. 173; 9 A. 705 (P. C.); 5 Sar. P. C. J. 61; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 906, distinguished.

Appeals from the judgment of Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court, in Civil Suit No. 169 of 1917.

FACTS.—Suits for specific performance of a contract for the sale of a house in pursuance of which a sum of Rs. 250 was paid as earnest money. When it came to the question of completing the contract, the would-be purchaser wanted the would-be vendors to get the property freed from an alleged mortgage, which the latter declined to do saying that there was no such charge at all and promising to indemnify in case the purchaser was caused loss thereby. The title-deeds had been given over to the would-be purchaser on the payment of the earnest money. The questions were whether the would-be vendors were entitled to treat the contract as repudiated by the other so as to resist the suit for specific performance.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Appellants (would-be-vendors).—Where a contract is entered into and one of the parties thereto insists upon the performance of something not in the contract as a condition precedent to his performing his part of the contract when in fact no such thing or difficulty exists, such insistence entitles the other party to treat the contract as at an end and to resort to the remedies available to him on a breach of the contract. What the respondent requires is that I should file a suit for a declaration that a certain mortgage which does not bind the house in question is not binding. In fact the mortgagor, who is a daughter's son, has no manner of right or claim to the property and a mortgage by him is the same as if there was none. He is, therefore, not even a proper party to the present suit, for he has no interest in the purchase-money. As to who are proper parties to a suit for specific performance, see Rangayya Reddy v. Subramanya Aiyar (1).

In Bindeshri Prasad v. Mahant Jairam (2) the Privy Council dismissed a suit for specific performance because the plaintiff asked for a warranty of title as a condition precedent to his completing the contract. Manik Chandra v. Abhoy Charan Gope (3) also lays down the same rule. See also Dart's Vendors and Purchasers, page 341.

The respondent has not at any time expressed his willingness and readiness to perform his part of the contract and not having done so within a reasonable time, we were entitled to put an end to the contract.

The Hon'ble the Advocate-General (Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar), for the Respondents.—What we have asked for is the contract plus something to which we may or may not be legally entitled. But that does not in any case amount to a repudiation of the contract. The appellants have obtained a release from the daughter's son in question. We asked that the release should be got registered. That is neither unreasonable nor impracticable.

The daughter's son is a necessary party, for he is apparently interested in the purchase-money and we ought to see that we get a title free from cloud. The title of the appellants was not free from cloud or there was no necessity for obtaining a release from their daughter's son. See also section 39 of the Indian Contract Act. I was under the circumstances entitled to refuse performance. See Greaves v. Wilson (4) and Bennett v. Fowler (5). The declaration for which we contended is quite necessary and reasonable. See section 18 of the Specific Relief Act. See also Turpin v. Chambers (6).

Mr. E. Duraiswamy Aiyar, in reply.—The daughter's son having no interest in the property, he cannot cloud our title by creating a mortgage over it. Bennett v. Fowler (5).

JUDGMENT.—In this case the purchasers sued for specific performance and the vendors for the rescission of the contract. Both suits were decided in favour of the purchasers, and the vendors appeal. The house in question stood in the name of Ellammal who, on 10th March 1916, executed in favour of her daughter's son Balasundara Chetti an unregistered document Exhibit I, reciting that she had promised to give his mother the house as a dowry and that the mother had paid Rs. 2,000 and providing that he was to have the house after her (Ellammal's) death. Then on 17th November 1916 she and her husband Madurai Chetty contracted in Exhibit B to sell the house to Melu T. C. Muhamad Oosman Sait & Co., the contract taking the form of a receipt for Rs. 500 which contained the stipulation that "the sale is subject to good title, if the title is found not in order this earnest of Rs. 500 is to be refunded, and they are to return the title-deeds."

On the 28th of December Ellammal got her grandson Balasundara Chetty to endorse on Exhibit I a release of all his rights under it, "In future my grandmother shall enjoy all rights in respect of the said house as before. I have no right whatever." It appears from the oral evidence that the purchasers under Exhibit B had come to know of Exhibit I and that the vendors in consequence had paid Balasundara Chetty to execute this release. It was not registered, nor was Exhibit I registered. The purchasers' subsequent letter Exhibit D shows that the purchasers in addition to the deposit of Rs. 500 made further payments of Rs. 250 and Rs. 750, and we were told that these sums were utilised to induce Balasundara Chetty to endorse a release on Exhibit I. The purchasers then discovered that even before the date of Exhibit I Balasundara Chetty had executed a mortgage of the suit house, and this fact coupled with the recital of Ellammal in Exhibit I that his mother had paid Rs. 2,000 opened up a possibility of a case being set up that the house had been purchased benami for his mother and had descended to him.

On 16th February 1917 the vendors' Vakil in Exhibit C called upon the purchasers to complete within a week, in default of which their clients would forfeit the deposit and sue for the return of the title-deeds. The purchasers' Vakil in Exhibit D, dated 21st February 1917, replied that the encumbrance certificate had disclosed the existence of the mortgage by Balasundara Chetty and an assignment of that mortgage, and that he had written to the mortgagor, the mortgagee and his assign to let him know what their claims were to the property. He said the delay was due to the vendors' not coming forward to set aside the mortgage, and refused to proceed further until they did.

To this the vendors' Vakil replied in Exhibit E, dated 7th March 1917, that the mortgage was executed without authority and could not affect the purchasers' rights and that his clients were willing to give an indemnity.

This was followed up by a letter from another Vakil on the vendors' behalf saying that, since no reply had been received to their Vakils' letter dated 21st February, the vendors cancelled the contract. The purchasers' Vakil replied in Exhibit G, dated 9th March 1917, that the letter dated 21st February 1917 had not been received, and that the purchasers were entitled to satisfactory assurances that the mortgages would not prejudice his clients and that they were entitled to discharge the mortgages out of the purchase-money if the vendors did not set them aside.

The vendors' Vakil replied in Exhibit H, dated 13th March 1917, that the purchasers were not entitled to this, and that his clients had directed him to give notice cancelling the contract because the purchasers were insisting on their bringing an unnecessary suit against the grandson who was a pauper and could not be made to pay costs. They gave the purchasers time until the 20th to pay the purchase-money and execute the sale-deed and stated that in the event of their failure to do so, the contract must be regarded as rescinded.

The purchasers' Vakil in Exhibit J, dated 15th March 1917, replied that the purchasers were entitled to have time to make inquiries into the encumbrances created by Balasundara Chetty and could not accept the mere statements of the vendors and conclude the sale. They followed this up by a letter Exhibit K, dated 20th March 1917, enclosing a form of declaration which they required the vendors to sign before a Magistrate and repeated that the vendors were bound to see to the discharge of the mortgages. The declaration was one which Ellammal could not truly make owing to her having executed Exhibit I. The vendors' Vakil replied on 26th March 1917 that the contract was rescinded owing to the purchasers' failure to complete the contract and their insistence on the discharge of the encumbrances and the declaration, and this is the rescission on which they now rely. In their reply, Exhibit M, also dated 26th March 1917, the purchasers' Vakil again insisted on the contract being specifically performed, the mortgage discharged, and the declaration asked for given, and intimated that they would sue for specific performance of the contract.

In my opinion they were entitled to do so. A purchaser is entitled to a good and a marketable title. If the title is found to be doubtful so as to require investigation, he cannot be compelled either to rescind the contract or to accept without investigation the doubtful title. He may, it is well settled in England, sue for specific performance of the contract and ask for an enquiry into the title by the result of which he will be bound.

In the present case, before the agreement to sell, the property had been mortgaged by the vendors' grandson and one of the vendors by executing Exhibit I had created evidence that it had been purchased in her name benami for her daughter, the mother of the mortgagor. Her conduct in executing Exhibit I shortly before entering into the agreement to sell has not been explained, for the story told by her husband in the box that she signed Exhibit I to convert her grandson to a virtuous life is as unworthy of acceptance as his other story that his unwillingness to complete the contract was due to his wife having fallen out of a carriage. Whatever the motives with which Exhibit I was signed, it might have been used by the mortgagee and his assignee as evidence in support of the grandson's right to execute the mortgage on the suit property and the validity of that mortgage would not have been affected by his subsequent endorsement on Exhibit I renouncing his claims, even if that endorsement had been registered, as it was not.

In these circumstances the vendors were not entitled to call upon the purchasers to complete the contract within a stated time without further investigation and to rescind the contract for their failure to do so. On the other hand, the purchasers were entitled to sue for specific performance and an inquiry into title. The evidence in this case established the title to their satisfaction, and in these circumstances they were entitled to ask for the specific performance which the learned Judge has decreed. Reliance was placed on the decision of the Privy Council in Bindeshri Prasad v. Mahant Jairam (2). In that case, however, the whole trouble arose because the purchaser who sued for specific performance had insisted, both before suit and in his plaint, on the insertion of a covenant in the sale-deed to which he was not entitled. In this case the vendors were entitled to sue for specific performance with a view of clearing up the question of title, and the case is, therefore, distinguishable. The learned Judge was right in his conclusion and the appeals are dismissed with costs.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

FIRST APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 73 OF 1918.

October 23, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Piggott and Mr. Justice Walsh.

MAHADEO KORI—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

SHEORAJ RAM TELI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Stamp Act (II of 1899), s. 12, Sch. I, Arts. 1, 5—Cancellation of adhesive stamp, how to be effected—Memorandum of agreement, what is—Sarkhat acknowledging debt and stipulating rate of interest payable, nature of—Stamp payable.

A memorandum of the rate of interest to be payable in future, when appended to an acknowledgment of a debt, over the signature of the debtor, for the express purpose of being used hereafter as evidence of an agreement to pay interest at the particular rate specified, must be regarded as a stipulation to pay interest within the meaning of the proviso to Article 5 of the First Schedule to the Stamp Act, so as to make the document a memorandum of an agreement within the meaning of Article 5 of the same Schedule, and a document, described as a sarkhat, which, in addition to acknowledging a debt, contains, over and above the said acknowledgment, a note of the rate of interest to be payable hereafter on the debt thus acknowledged, is a document of the foregoing description.

The question whether a particular adhesive stamp has or has not been cancelled in a sufficiently effectual manner, so that it cannot be used again, is one which must be considered with reference to the facts of each particular case. Where a person writes his name close to a stamp on its left side, and continues the line which forms the upper portion of the writing in the Hindi character across the face of the stamp, and immediately against the right hand edge thereof continues his writing by the insertion of words of formal acknowledgment, this is an effectual cancellation of the stamp within the meaning of section 12 of the Stamp Act.

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 10th April 1918.

FACTS.—The plaintiff brought a suit on the basis of a sarkhat to recover a sum of money from the defendant. The terms of the sarkhat were:—"Sri sarkhat likh dya Sheoraj Ram Teli sakin kaithaulia wale ke Mahadeo Ram koiri sakin kaithaulia wale ne, ogay rupiya liya anken do sau rupiya biaj dar derh rupiya saikrah mahwari, Miti Baisakh Sudi Ekum Sambat 1971." A stamp was fixed to the document on the top of the paper and the paper to the left of the stamp bore the signature of the defendant with the words "ba kalam khud," and the paper to the right of the stamp bore the words "sarkhat likha so sahi." These words to the left and right of the stamp were joined together with a straight line drawn horizontally across the stamp. The defence raised the objection that inasmuch as the stamp had not been cancelled in accordance with the requirements of the law, the sarkhat was inadmissible in evidence The trial Court allowed the objection and dismissed the claim, holding that as the claim was based on the sarkhat, oral evidence could not be allowed.

The lower Appellate Court, however, took a different view of the sarkhat. The learned Judge held that it was an agreement and should have borne an eight-anna stamp, and that it was admissible in evidence on payment by the plaintiff of the requisite stamp and penalty, and remanded the case for trial on the merits.

Mr. Kamalakant Varma, for the Appellant.

Mr. Lakshmi Narain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by the plaintiff for the recovery of money lent with interest. As regards one portion of the claim the plaintiff did not profess to support it by documentary evidence. At the hearing he offered to be bound by the defendant's statement on oath. When thus examined, the defendant, although he had denied all liability in his written statement, admitted having borrowed a sum of Rs. 125 on a certain date. The first Court accordingly passed a decree for this sum, with interest by way of damages, and dismissed the rest of the claim. In respect of the portion of the claim thus dismissed, the plaintiff tendered in evidence a certain document described as a sarkhat. One of the matters in controversy which has not yet been tried out is the date on which this document was executed, there being a discrepancy between the year of execution as stated in the first part of the document and that stated in a later portion of the same. The defendant's case was that he had in fact incurred the liability referred to in this paper and had written his signature, and other words importing acknowledgment, upon the paper produced, but that this liability had been subsequently discharged by him. The learned Munsif, however, did not try out the case on this basis. It is a little difficult to understand how he purported to deal with this document described as a sarkhat. He must at one stage at least have treated the said paper as evidence in the case, for he examined the defendant Mahadeo upon it and recorded his admission as to his signature and other words in the Hindi character appearing thereon. In the end, however, he came to the conclusion that the document was not admissible in evidence at all. He did this upon an objection taken by the defendant regarding the cancellation of the adhesive stamp of one anna which appears on the face of the document. Referring to the provisions of section 12 of the Indian Stamp Act (No. II of 1899), he held that there had been no effective cancellation of this stamp, and it followed as a consequence that the document must be treated as not stamped at all. The document itself might in its turn be regarded as a mere acknowledgment of the debt, within the meaning of those words as used in Article 1 of the First Schedule to the Stamp Act aforesaid. On this view the document was chargeable with a stamp duty of one anna and, if the learned Munsif was right in treating it as virtually unstamped, this was a defect which could not be cured by the imposition of any penalty. Having thus rejected the document as inadmissible, the learned Munsif went on to hold that the claim in respect of the debt therein referred to was not proved, and upon this he dismissed this part of the claim. He got rid of the defendant's admission of liability by accepting the defendant's statement in its entirety, according to which the written acknowledgment had been given on the earlier of the two dates appearing on the face of the document, with the result that the suit on the date on which it was filed would have been barred by limitation. The learned District Judge in appeal has held that the document in question is not a mere acknowledgment of a debt. It is that undoubtedly; but it contains, over and above the said acknowledgment, a note as to the rate of interest to be payable hereafter on the debt thus acknowledged. The learned District Judge holds that this amounts to a stipulation to pay interest at the specified rate, within the meaning of the proviso to Article 1 of the First Schedule already referred to. He holds, therefore, that the document, besides being an acknowledgment of a debt, is a memorandum of an agreement within the meaning of Article 5 of the Schedule and is, therefore, liable to pay a stamp duty of eight annas. He has ordered the duty and penalty to be levied and the document to be admitted in evidence subject to payment of the same. In consequence of this order the learned District Judge observes that there has been no real trial on the merits in respect of this part of the claim, the real question in issue being whether the debt was contracted, or formally acknowledged by the defendant, on the earlier or on the later of the two dates appearing on the face of the disputed document. It is certainly open to argument whether, on this view of the case, the learned District Judge would not have complied more strictly with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure by remitting an issue for the determination of the first Court, and then finally disposing of the appeal in accordance with the finding which might be arrived at on the issue so remitted. The learned District Judge, however, has preferred to deal with the case on the basis that the claim, so far as it related to the sum referred to in the sarkhat, had been disposed of by the first Court upon a preliminary point, and he has passed an order of remand under Order XLI, rule 23, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The appeal before us is against this order of remand, and as no exception is taken in the memorandum of appeal to the particular procedure adopted by the District Judge, it does not seem necessary for us to raise any question on the point. The points argued before us are two: first, whether the document in question is a mere acknowledgment of a debt, falling under Article 1 of the First Schedule to the Indian Stamp Act, or is also a memorandum of an agreement, liable to a duty of eight annas under Article 5 of the same Schedule; secondly, whether or not the adhesive stamp of one anna on this document has been effectually cancelled within the meaning of section 12 of the same Act. On the first of these points a number of authorities were cited to us. It may be remarked at once that all authorities anterior in date to the passing of Act No. II of 1899 require to be reconsidered in the light of the proviso to Article 1 of the First Schedule which was added by the enactment aforesaid. I would also remark further that, when all is said and done, each reported decision must be considered strictly with reference to its own circumstances and the precise terms of the particular document under consideration by the Court. There are decisions of at least of two High Courts, since the passing of Act II of 1899, which lend a great deal of support to the view taken by the learned District Judge. The cases are Laxumibai v. Ganesh Raghunath (1) and Mulchand Lala v. Kashibullav Biswas (2). Each of these decisions seems to turn upon the view that a memorandum of the rate of interest to be payable in future, when appended to an acknowledgment of debt over the signature of the debtor, for the express purpose of being used hereafter as evidence of an agreement to pay interest at the particular rate so specified, must be regarded as involving a stipulation to pay interest within the meaning of the proviso to Article 1 of the Schedule, so as to make the document a memorandum of an agreement within the meaning of Article 5 of the same Schedule. If the matter came before this Court absolutely as res integra, I should feel no hesitation in expressing my own agreement with these decisions. There are, however, two cases of this Court upon which considerable stress has been laid on the other side. These are Udit Upadhya v. Bhawani Din (3) and Dulmha Kunwar v. Mahadeo Prasad (4). The documents dealt with by the learned Judges of this Court in the second of these two cases were so differently worded from the one now before us that it is doubtful how far the decision in that case throws any light on the question under consideration. The case was a peculiar one and the learned Judges based their decision upon a variety of circumstances, of which the question of the admissibility of the two documents concerned was only one. The conclusion which they came to, as a matter of fact, was that the documents in question were not liable to stamp duty at all; and in the present case, of course, if we found it possible to take the same view regarding the sarkhat now under consideration, the only result would be that we should affirm the order of remand. The earlier of the two Allahabad cases bears a closer resemblance to the one now before us. Taking the decision as a whole, I think it may be said that the learned Judges regarded the question as one not free from difficulty, but had formed so strong an opinion in favour of the plaintiff's case on the merits that they were most reluctant to come to any decision which would have the result of excluding from the consideration of the Court the document upon which the said plaintiff relied. Moreover, the contention raised before them on behalf of the defendants respondents was that the said document fell within the definition of a promissory note, and this was the contention which was repelled by the learned Judges in their decision. The question whether it amounted to a memorandum of an agreement, within the meaning of Article 5 of the First Schedule, does not seem to have been discussed or considered. It has been pressed upon us on behalf of the appellant in this case that a practice has grown up in these provinces, perhaps in consequence of the two decisions above referred to, of appending a memorandum as to the rate of interest payable to acknowledgments of liability signed by the debtor, and treating such documents as mere acknowledgments liable to no more than a stamp duty of one anna. There may be some force in this contention, and I feel that we ought to be reluctant to disturb any settled practice which may have grown up under previous decisions of this Court. At the same time, as a mere question of law considered with reference to the wording of Articles 1 and 5 of the Schedule already referred to, I am bound to say that the document which we are now considering does, in my opinion, contain a stipulation to pay interest at the rate therein specified, within the meaning of the proviso to the first of these Articles, and does amount to a memorandum of an agreement to pay interest at the said rate within the meaning of the fifth Article.

For myself, however, I should prefer to base my decision upon a clear finding that there has been an effective cancellation of the one anna adhesive stamp on this document within the meaning of section 12 of Act No. II of 1899. A similar question came before a Bench of the Oudh Court of which I was a member [Mohammad Amir Mirza Beg v. Babu Kedar Nath (5)]. Mr. Lindsay and I concurred in holding that the stamp produced before us, which had been cancelled by having three lines drawn across it in different directions, each of the said lines extending more or less beyond the edges of the stamp on to the paper on which the document was written, had been cancelled in a sufficiently effectual manner to satisfy the provisions of section 12 of Act No. II of 1899. We noticed at the time that there was a decision of the Bombay High Court in a different sense, namely, a case reported as Virabhadrapa v. Bhimaji (6). But we regarded the two cases as to some extent distinguishable, and as a matter of authority we preferred to follow a decision* of the Chief Court of the Punjab to which reference is made in our reported judgment. The question whether a particular adhesive stamp has or has not been cancelled in a sufficiently effectual manner, so that it cannot be used again, is one which must obviously be considered with reference to the facts of each particular case. In the case now before us the defendant-appellant has written his name close to the stamp on its left hand side. He has then continued the line which forms the upper portion of the writing in the Hindi character across the face of the stamp, and immediately against the right hand edge thereof has continued his writing by the insertion of words of formal acknowledgment. In all probability the only reason why he did not write across the face of the stamp was that he regarded it as unlucky, or improper, to deface the Royal image by such writing. That he intended to effect a definite cancellation of the stamp seems to me beyond question, and also that both parties at the time regarded the cancellation as sufficient. It seems to me impossible to treat the words of section 12 of the Indian Stamp Act as requiring such a degree of cancellation as would make it physically impossible for any dishonest person to make hereafter a fraudulent use of the stamp label. It must be a matter of common knowledge that, even the system of cancellation prescribed under the orders of the Government for Court-fee labels affixed to records and papers filed in the course of civil litigation, has been defeated by fraudulent practices entered into by collusion with members of the record-room staff; yet it could not be suggested that the system of punching prescribed by the Government orders for such labels was not prima facie an adequate cancellation of the stamp within the meaning of the law. I think a matter of this sort should be dealt with in a fair and equitable spirit and with a presumption in favour of honest dealing rather than of a deliberate intention to lay the basis for a subsequent fraud on the revenue. In my opinion the stamp on the document now before us has been sufficiently cancelled within the meaning of the law, and the question upon which the two Courts below have differed does not strictly arise for determination. Under the circumstances of the case, no objection having been taken by the plaintiff, and the order of the District Judge having presumably been complied with so far as the plaintiff is concerned, I think the proper course for us is simply to dismiss this appeal, and I would do so accordingly with costs.

WALSH, J.—I entirely agree. As the matter has been so fully discussed, I propose to add a word or two on both points. In my opinion this document is plainly a memorandum of agreement within the terms of Article 5 of the Schedule to the Stamp Act, and any other view is almost unarguable. It is true that it contains an acknowledgment of liability for a definite sum but it also contains a term to pay interest thereon, involving future liability. I agree with the view taken in the cases of Mulchand Lala v. Kashibullav Biswas (2) and Enatullah Biswas v. Gajarudai Biswas (7), each of which bears a similarity to this case. Without venturing to differ from the view taken in Uait Upadhya v. Bhawani Din (3), I note that the Chief Justice in that case described the document in the following language: "To us it appears to be nothing more than a mere memorandum or note drawn up between the parties as to a transaction which had just been settled between them." That is a description of a memorandum of agreement and would have brought the document within Article 5 if the point had been taken. I agree with my brother that it would appear from the report in Uait Upadhya v. Bhawani Din (3) that the point was not present to the Chief Justice's mind. On the other point I agree entirely with my brother Piggott's judgment in Oudh Cases, Mohammad Amir Mirza Beg v. Babu Beaar Nath (5). All that a Court has to look at, in my judgment, under section 12 is whether the adhesive stamp has been in any effectual manner cancelled so that it cannot be used again. I think that means so that it cannot lawfully or conscientiously be used again. My brother has pointed out in a passage which I cannot do better than quote: "It is difficult to see how any one without destroying an adhesive stamp altogether can so cancel it as to make it absolutely impossible for an expert forger to remove the mark and make use of it elsewhere." It is not everybody who can write with success upon a recently affixed adhesive stamp. A stamp may be almost entirely defaced by accidentally upsetting ink all over it. That would not be a cancellation. On the other hand a line deliberately drawn through it with the object of cancelling it is, in my opinion, as effectual a cancellation as writing part of a signature or of a date upon it. It is the method adopted by some Banks for cancelling the name on a cheque which has been paid. In this case the writer chose to sign his name on one side of the stamp, to add certain requisite particulars on the other side of the stamp and to unite the two pieces of writing by a continuous line drawn across the stamp I think that was an effectual cancellation and I agree with the Oudh case that whether the requirement of the law as to the cancellation of the stamp has or has not been sufficiently met is a question to be determined upon examination of the document in each particular case. The result in this case is that the plaintiff must treat this document as covered by Article 5 and pay the additional duty.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), s. 21—"Payment in full," meaning of—Discharge of debts, whether payment—Annulment of adjudication.

The payment by an insolvent to his creditors of four annas in the rupee and obtaining a full discharge of their debts is not a "payment in full" within the meaning of section 21 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, and such payment is not sufficient in law to entitle him to an order annulling the order of adjudication.

JUDGMENT.—The insolvent arranged with his creditors by paying them four annas in the rupee that they should give him a receipt in full discharge of their debts. It has been ruled both in England and India that such a payment is not "payment in full" within the meaning of section 21 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act corresponding to section 35 of the English Bankruptcy Act [see Subrati Jan Mahomed, In re (1), Shivlal Rathi, In re (2), Flatau, In re, Official Receiver, Ex parte (3), Izod, In re, Official Receiver, Ex parte (4), Hester, In re, Hester, Ex parte (5) and Keet, In re, Official Receiver, Ex parte (6)]. This cannot be said to be a case in which the debtor ought not to have been adjudged insolvent, for the adjudication was made on his own application and clearly he was unable to pay his debts. But then it is urged that we must treat it as a composition under section 28 and pass an order annulling the adjudication under section 30. Clearly, however, it is not a case of composition within the meaning of the Act. There was no proposal, so far as we can gather, from the materials placed before us, for a composition to be submitted to the Court and we do not find that the Court, proceeding as directed by sections 28 and 29, approved of any such proposal. It is only when the Court has approved of a proposal for composition properly submitted to it that it may annul the adjudication. Then it is said that we have a sort of general discretion to annul an order of adjudication if we are satisfied that the conduct of insolvent has not been in any way fraudulent or dishonest. But even supposing there was such a general discretion, on which question we have not been referred to any decision, the Court had no opportunity of examining the insolvent in this connection so as to form a proper conclusion as to his conduct. The petitioner seems to have misconceived his remedy, for he proceeded to present an application for withdrawal of the petition, and he also seems to have been under the impression that it was enough for his purpose if he could get his creditors to give him a discharge for their debts. That is not sufficient in law, as has been pointed out in all the cases referred to.

We must, therefore, dismiss the insolvent's appeal. It will be open to him to make a proper application before the Insolvency Court.

The Official Assignee will be entitled to the costs of the appeal out of the estate.

Where in execution of a decree against a tenant for arrears of rent the Court decides a controversy between a usufructuary mortgagee and a simple mortgagee as to their respective rights under their mortgages, the decision of the Court is not appealable, as the questions in controversy are not questions relating to the execution, satisfaction or discharge of the decree and do not arise between the parties to the suit or their representatives-in-interest within the meaning of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, nor are the matters in difference between the mortgagees such as ought to be summarily determined in a proceeding under section 171 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order made by the Court of first instance under sub-section (1) (c) of section 171 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The circumstances under which the order has been made are not disputed. The Maharaja of Burdwan obtained a decree for arrears of rent against one of his tenants. In execution of this decree the holding was advertised for sale. It appears that the tenant had executed a simple mortgage of the holding on the 27th May 1900 and a usufructuary mortgage on the 9th July 1903. On the 17th January 1911, the simple mortgagee made an application under sub section (3) of section 170 for leave to deposit the judgment-debt on the allegation that he had, in the holding advertised for sale, an interest voidable on the sale. This application was granted without notice to the decree-holder or the judgment debtor. On the 11th April 1911, the simple mortgagee who had made the deposit, applied to the Court to be put in possession of the holding as first mortgagee thereof under section 171, sub-section (1) (c). Notices were thereupon issued to the persons interested in the holding. On the 17th May 1911, the judgment debtor appeared and objected to the grant of the application. He stated that the simple mortgage had been satisfied, that the mortgagee had no subsisting interest such as would entitle him to make an application under sub-section 3 of section 170, and that, in reality, the money deposited by the mortgagee was his own money, which he had entrusted to the mortgagee to be put into Court on his behalf. He added that his usufructuary mortgagee and not he himself was in possession of the holding. On the same day, the usufructuary mortgagee also appeared in Court and resisted the application of the simple mortgagee on the same grounds as urged by the judgment-debtor. The Court thereupon took evidence and came to the conclusion that the usufructuary mortgage had not been acted upon and that the judgment-debtor was still in possession. The Court consequently directed the simple mortgagee to be placed in possession. The usufructuary mortgagee appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who held that the appeal was incompetent, because the questions in controversy between the two mortgagees did not fall within the scope of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908. The Subordinate Judge, however, proceeded to express an opinion on the merits of the case, namely, that the usufructuary mortgage was not collusive and that the usufructuary mortgagee was in possession of the holding. We are now invited by the usufructuary mortgagee to set aside the order of the Court of first instance, on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction under sub-section (1) (c) of section 171 to make an order for delivery of possession as against a stranger to the proceeding. The order of the Subordinate Judge has also been assailed on the ground that the appeal before him was competent, and, on the facts found, should have been allowed.

In so far as the competency of the appeal before the Subordinate Judge is concerned, we are of opinion that the view taken by him is unquestionably sound. The questions in controversy between the mortgagees are not questions relating to the execution, satisfaction or discharge of the decree, nor do they arise between the parties to the suit or their representatives-in-interest. Consequently the appeal to the Subordinate Judge was incompetent and the appeal preferred to this Court is equally open to the same objection.

In so far as the propriety of the order of the Court of the first instance is concerned, we are of opinion that the case falls within the principle laid down in the case of Ram Narain Routh v. Lal Dis Routh (1) It was pointed out in that case that there is a noticeable difference between the expressions used by the Legislature in sub-section (c) of section 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and clause (4) of section 13 of Regulation VIII of 1819, which deals with similar matters. Under the Patni Regulation, the person who makes the deposit to avert the intended sale not only obtains the position of a mortgagee but is also entitled, on applying for the same, to obtain immediate possession of the tenure of the defaulter. On the other hand, sub-section (1) (c) of section 171 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not explicitly state that the depositor is entitled to be placed in possession of the holding upon an application made to the Court. It is not necessary for us to determine on the present occasion whether, even as between the depositor and the judgment-debtor, this clause may not be construed as embodying merely a statement of the rights of the parties and not prescribing also the procedure for enforcement of those rights. It is plain that in so far as two strangers to the proceeding are concerned, it could never have been intended that the matters in difference between them should be summarily determined in a proceeding under section 171.

The result is that the appeal presented to this Court is dismissed, but the Rule is made absolute and the order of the Court below is discharged as against the petitioner, the usufructuary mortgagee. The order of the lower Court, in so far as it makes the petitioner liable for costs, is also discharged. There will be no order for costs either in the appeal or in the Rule.

Appeal dismissed; Rule made absolute.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 488 OF 1918.

July 18, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Das.

PAHALAD SINGH—DEFENDANT No. 2—APPELLANT

SAJIWAN RAI AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND PHUL LAL—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 174—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151—Execution of rent decree Sale—Deposit of decretal amount within 30 days—Failure of Court to set aside sale—Suit to set aside sale, maintainability of—Court, duty of—Inherent power, exercise of.

In execution of a rent decree certain property was sold and was purchased by P., who was not a party to the suit. Within 30 days of the sale the judgment-debtor deposited the decretal money with the usual penalty and talbana for notices, under section 174, Bengal Tenancy Act, and asked that the sale be set aside. Notices were not served and as the judgment-debtor took no further steps, the Court confirmed the sale. The judgment-debtor then brought the present suit to set aside the sale and to obtain possession. The Appellate Court held that the suit was not maintainable, but that complete relief could be given under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code by treating the suit as an application under that section. The auction-purchaser appealed:

Held, (1) that the suit was maintainable and the plaintiff was entitled to the relief he claimed, but that section 151 of the Code did not apply as an application under that section could only be made in a pending suit and as the Court had held that a suit did not lie there was no suit pending: [p. 982, col. 2.]

(2) that section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not make it necessary for any notice to be served on the persons affected by an application under that section, and on the conditions imposed by the section being complied with, it was obligatory on the Court to set aside the sale. [p. 982, col. 1; p. 984, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Saran.

Messrs. S. C. Mitter and S. K. Mitter, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ram Pershad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the respondent for setting aside the sale held on 7th January 1913. It appears that a rent decree was obtained against the respondent and in execution of that rent decree the property, namely, Khasra Plots Nos. 121 to 127, were purchased by the appellant who, it will be useful to remember, is not the decree-holder. Within 30 days from the date of sale, the plaintiffs against whom the rent decree was passed deposited the decretal amount with the usual penalty and talbana for notices under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and they asked in terms of that section that the sale may be set aside.

It has been found by the lower Appellate Court that the plaintiffs did deposit the decretal amount with the usual penalty. Notices, however, were not served, and as the plaintiffs took no further steps in the matter, the learned Munsif confirmed the sale. I have gone through the order-sheet of the execution case and I do not find that the learned Munsif refused the application of the plaintiffs for setting aside the sale under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but he does say this: "No steps taken by the judgment-debtor for service of notice on the auction-purchaser. The sale is, therefore, confirmed and the case is dismissed on full satisfaction."

The plaintiff has accordingly brought this suit for determination of his title to Khasra Plots Nos. 121 to 127, for setting aside the sale in execution of the rent decree obtained against him and for possession of the property.

The lower Appellate Court was of opinion that no suit was maintainable for obtaining the reliefs which the plaintiffs did claim in their suit, but it thought that the suit could be treated as an application under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code and complete relief could be given to the plaintiffs under section 151 of the Code. This is erroneous. An application can only be made in a pending suit, and if the lower Appellate Court was of opinion that the suit did not lie, it is clear that an application could not be made in such a suit. But I am of opinion that a suit is maintainable and that the plaintiffs are entitled to the reliefs claimed by them.

The question which has been argued before me at great length is this: Were the auction-purchasers entitled to any notice of the deposit made under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act? If they were not entitled to such a notice, then the Court had no option but to set aside the sale and further the Court had no power at all to confirm the sale, seeing that all the conditions laid down by section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act had been satisfied. The learned Vakil on behalf of the appellant urges that section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act must be read along with Order XXI, rule 92, of the Code of Civil Procedure and when so read, it isclear that an order cannot be made under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act unless notice of the application has been given to all persons affected by such an application.

The question is one of importance and I desire to deal with this matter as fully as I am able to do.

Section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides that "Where a tenure or holding is sold for an arrear of rent due thereon, then, at any time within thirty days from the date of sale, the judgment-debtor may apply to have the sale set aside, on his depositing in Court, for payment to the decree-holder, the amount recoverable under the decree with costs, and, for payment to the purchaser, a sum equal to five per centum of the purchase-money," and then the section proceeds to say that 'If such deposit is made within the thirty days, the Court shall pass an order setting aside the sale, and the provisions of section 315 (Order XXI, rule 93) of the Code of Civil Procedure shall apply in the case of a sale so set aside."

It will be noticed that there is no provision at all in section 174 for any notice to be served on the persons affected by an application under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and I am not prepared to hold in the face of the clear and precise language employed in section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act that such a notice is necessary. The learned Vakil on behalf of the appellant has referred me first of all to two cases, Janardhan Ganguli v. Kali Kristo Thakur (1) and Bungshidhar Haldar v. Kedar Nath Mondal (2). The case of Janardhan Ganguli v. Kali Kristo Thakur (1) was a case where the application to set aside the sale was made expressly under section 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure and was made by a person not the judgment debtor, and the whole controversy in that case was whether an application under section 310A at all lay, because it was contended that in a case between landlord and tenant the only application that could be made to set aside the sale would be under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and as the applicant was not the judgment debtor, therefore there was no remedy at all. The Court after a full discussion on the subject came to the conclusion that there was nothing to indicate that section 310A was intended not to apply to sales in execution of rent decrees. I do not read this case as laying down that the proviso laid down in Order XXI, rule 92, of the Code of Civil Procedure must be read as a part of section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The next case relied upon is the case of Bungshidhar Haldar v. Kedar Nath Mondal (2). In that case one N obtained a decree against R for arrears of rent. On the 13th February 1895 the holding was sold in execution of the rent decree and was purchased by K. On the 13th March 1895, one B, who, it will be noticed, was not the judgment-debtor, applied to have the sale set aside under section 310A, alleging that he had acquired an interest in the property sold many years before the rent decree. No notice was served on the persons affected by that application. It was held that the provisions of section 310A may be applicable to sales of tenures held under the provisions of the Tenancy Act and that persons other than the judgment-debtor, whose immoveable property has been sold, may apply under that section to have the sale set aside on complying with the conditions prescribed by the section. This case is no authority for the proposition that if the application was made under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act it would be necessary to serve notice on persons affected by such an application.

In my opinion the cases relied upon by the learned Vakil on behalf of the appellant do not establish that the proviso to rule 92 applies to section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and I am not prepared to hold that the proviso does apply. But it has been argued by the learned Vakil that at any rate section 143 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides in express terms that subject to any rules made by the Court and subject also to the other provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the Code of Civil Procedure shall apply to all such suits.

(1) 23 C. 393; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 261.
(2) 1 C. W. N. 114.

The argument is that if there is nothing in the Bengal Tenancy Act, which is the incorporating Act, to show that any particular provision of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to the Bengal Tenancy Act, then that particular provision of the Civil Procedure Code must apply to the Bengal Tenancy Act by incorporation. I quite agree that if the Bengal Tenancy Act does not lay down any procedure for any particular matter, and if there is a complete procedure for that matter in the Civil Procedure Code, then, unless there is something to the contrary in the Bengal Tenancy Act, the procedure laid down in the Civil Procedure Code must apply to that particular matter. But there is neither principle nor authority for the proposition that where there is a procedure for that particular matter in the Bengal Tenancy Act itself, still it is necessary to go to the Code because the Code requires something more to be done than is necessary under the Tenancy Act. "If the incorporating Act", said Lord Westbury in St. Sepulchre (Vicar & Church-Wardens of), In re (3), "gives itself a complete rule on the subject, the expression of that rule will undoubtedly amount to an exception of the subject-matter of the general rule contained in the incorporated Act." In this case, section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act contains a complete rule on the subject, and I am of opinion that the expression of that rule undoubtedly amounts to an exception of the subject-matter of the general rule contained in Order XXI, rule 92, of the Code.

In my opinion the proviso to Order XXI, rule 92, does not apply to section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that, therefore, under sub-clause (2) of section 174 it was obligatory on the Court to set aside the sale as soon as the deposit was made within the thirty days. In support of the procedure laid down in sub-clause (2) of section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act it may be urged that the question is between landlord and tenant, and if there is no question at all that the deposit has been made within thirty days, there is no reason why any notice should be served on any person. The Court must of course, be satisfied that the conditions laid down in section 174 have been complied with. It is not a question of law but is a question of arithmetic, that is to say, purely a question of calculation whether the amount recoverable under the decree, with costs, and, for payment to the purchaser, a sum equal to five per centum of the purchase-money, has been deposited by the judgment-debtor. In my opinion the Court should have set aside the sale as soon as the deposit was made by the judgment-debtor within thirty days from the date of sale,

The next question is, what is the remedy of the judgment-debtor now. The learned Vakil on behalf of the appellant argues first of all that if rule 92 applies, then, of course, the Court has no jurisdiction at all to set aside the sale, because rule 92 expressly provides that "No suit to set aside an order made under this rule shall be brought by any person against whom such order is made." I have held that rule 92 is not applicable and, therefore, in my opinion, sub-section (3) of rule 92 does not apply at all. But it is further contended by the learned Vakil that even if rule 92 does not apply, the order passed by the Court in the application under section 174 was an order under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that, therefore, the only remedy available to the judgment debtor was to appeal from that order and to come to this Court in second appeal, and he relies upon two cases as Mahomed Akbar Jamon Khan v. Sukhdeo Panday (4) and Raghubar Dayal Sukul v. Jadu Nandan Missir (5). Both these cases were between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor. The auction-purchasers in both these cases were the decree-holders and it was expressly laid down in the case reported as Mahomed Akbar Jaman Khan v. Sukhdeo Panday (4) that the question being between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor, the application came expressly within section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure and, therefore, the order was appealable. The learned Judges were very careful to say as follows: "It is not necessary to lay down an inflexible rule that every order made upon an application under rule 29 falls within the scope of section 47. The true nature of the order must be examined, and the character of the parties affected thereby ascertained, before it can be determined whether the order does or does not fall within the scope of section 47." In my view the opinion expressed by the learned Judges in the case reported as Mahomed Akbar Jaman Khan v. Sukhdeo Panday (4) is destructive of the argument advanced by the learned Vakil. The case before me is not a case between the decree-holder and the judgment debtor and, therefore, certainly so far as the cases reported as Mahomed Akbar Jaman Khan v. Sukhdeo Panday (4) and Raghubar Dayal Sukul v. Jada Nandan Missir (5) are concerned, it was not a matter within section 47 at all and therefore there could not be an appeal from that order passed under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

It is next urged by the learned Vakil that if rule 92 and section 47 do not apply, then the only other remedy available to the judgment-debtor is to proceed by way of review of the order passed by the lower Appellate Court. In my opinion there is no substance at all in this argument. I am of opinion that there being an infringement of the right of the judgment-debtor, the judgment-debtor was entitled to maintain a suit and that the Courts below had jurisdiction to grant complete relief to the plaintiff in such a suit. They have given complete relief to the plaintiff, although they were of opinion that such a suit did not lie. In my opinion the view taken by the Courts below that relief could be given only under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure is erroneous. The Court had power to give complete relief in the suit itself. As the relief has been granted, there is nothing further to be said.

I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

A Court of Appeal is competent to remand a case for re-trial under circumstances not mentioned in rule 23, Order XLI of the Code, where the ends of justice require this to be done. [p. 986, cols. 1 & 2.]

An appeal preferred by an infant not represented by a guardian ad litem cannot be entertained, but in such a case the High Court will exercise its powers under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code and make such order as is necessary for the ends of justice. [p. 986, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Durbhanga, dated the 12th February 1910, reversing that of the Munsif, Madhubani, dated the 14th June 1909.

Babu Lakshminarayan Singh, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiff in a suit to enforce a mortgage security alleged to have been executed by the defendant in his favour on the 14th May 1907. The suit was commenced on the 15th June 1908. Amongst other defences the defendant urged that he was an infant at the time when the transaction took place. The Court found upon the evidence that the defendant was born on the 17th August 1892 and that a guardian of his person and property had been appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act so that the defendant could not attain majority till the 17th August 1913. Notwithstanding this finding, the Court heard the case on the merits and made a decree against the defendant though he was not represented by a guardian ad litem. The defendant appealed to the District Judge and although according to his own contention which had been accepted as well-founded by the original Court he was an infant, he preferred the appeal himself as if he was sui juris. No objection was taken by the plaintiff-respondent that the appeal was not properly constituted; on the other hand the plaintiff attacked the finding of the primary Court as to the date of birth of the defendant. Upon that point his contention failed and the District Judge affirmed the finding of the first Court. The District Judge then proceeded to hold that the suit was improperly constituted because the defendant, an infant, was not represented by a guardian ad litem; but he held that he had no authority to remand the case under rule 23 of Order XLI of the Code of 1908, inasmuch as the suit had not been decided in the Court of first instance upon a preliminary point. The Judge thereupon allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff has now appealed to this Court and on his behalf it has been contended that the appeal before the District Judge was incompetent because it had been preferred by an infant not represented by a guardian ad litem. The learned Vakil for the appellant has, however, conceded that if his contention is well-founded, the present appeal must also be treated as incompetent because he has not taken any steps to have the respondent represented by a guardian for the purposes of his appeal, though according to the concurrent findings of the Courts below the defendant-respondent is still an infant. Under these circumstances we have to exercise our powers under section 151 of the Code and to make such order as is necessary for the ends of justice. It is clear, in our opinion, that the learned Judge took a restricted view of his powers as a Court of Appeal. No doubt it has been held by this Court in the case of Abdul Karim v. Fayez Buksh (1) that a Court of Appeal is competent to make an order of remand only when the conditions mentioned in rule 23, Order XLI, are fulfilled. We are, however, not prepared to accept that view as sound. Section 564 of the Code of 1882, which restricted the powers of an Appellate Court to remand a case, is not reproduced in the Code of 1908 and as already explained by this Court in the case of Tohra Bibi v. Zabeda Khatoon (2), it is competent to a Court of Appeal to remand a case under circumstances not mentioned in rule 23 of Order XLI where the ends of justice require that the case should be retried. In the case before us the proceedings have been throughout irregular, and the only course which the Court can possibly pursue is to discharge the decrees of both the Courts below and to remand the case to the Court of first instance. The plaintiff will be at liberty to take steps for the appointment of a guardian ad litem for the defendant. When he has done so, the suit will be tried out on the merits. There will be no order for costs as the respondent is not represented before us.

JUDGMENT.

NAPIER, J.—This is an appeal from the District Court of Tinnevelly in a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover possession of certain property from the 1st defendant, the suit being based on a lease granted to the 1st defendant and on title. The present 2nd defendant applied to be made a party, alleging that neither the plaintiff nor the 1st defendant had ever any right to the land. This defendant alleged further that he was the owner, and that he was in possession and pleaded adverse possession from enjoyment by his ancestors. The 1st defendant remained ex parte and the suit proceeded between the plaintiff and the 2nd defendant and some supplementary parties

The issues framed were "whether the plaint mentioned lease is true and valid, whether the plaint mentioned land belongs to plaintiff and whether plaintiff has been in possession within the statutory period"

The plaintiff has all along denied that the 2nd defendant was his tenant and, as far as he is concerned, sought to recover the land on his title. The contention of the 2nd defendant before the lower Appellate Court was that the plaintiff was only a farmer of the revenue of the land, that the 1st defendant never had any interest and that he had a permanent right of occupancy in it. This contention was negatived by the Court, which held that the plaintiff was the sole owner of the land and the 2nd defendant, although he had shown possession, had not established a permanent right of occupancy.

Before us the appellant (2nd defendant) put forward the contention that the plaintiff was a mere Melvaramdar and that the ownership of the land was in him. The land being Government ryotwari, this contention would entail the proposition that, in addition to the position of the Government as owning the Melvaram, there can be another Melvaramdar introduced between Government and the owner of the land. Speaking for myself, I was surprised to hear such an argument put forward. But I find that the same contention was advanced in the well known case of Veeranan Ambalam v. Annasawmi Iyer (1). Whatever else was decided in that case, however, this contention was negatived, and it does not require serious consideration. There is not a trace anywhere in the Law Reports of the view that Government in granting a patta was only granting a portion of its share in the revenue as in some cases of inams. The real substantial argument before us was that, although the plaintiff was the owner of the land, the 2nd defendant should be held, on the evidence, to be entitled to permanent rights of occupancy on the analogy of a Zemindari tenant prior to the Madras Estates Land Act. It must be conceded at once that the decisions in Veeranan Ambalam v. Annasawmi Iyer (1) and Venkatachala Goundan v. Rangaratnam Aiyar (2) go some way to support the appellant's contention. The decision in Veeranan Ambalam v. Annasawmi Iyer (1) seems to treat one particular question as of great importance, namely, whether it has been shown that the defendants' possession commenced under the plaintiff, while the decision in Venkatachalla Goundan v. Rangaratnam Aiyar (2) seems to be founded on the proposition that a pattador must show that he let the tenant into possession and that he was in fact a tenant from year to year. The learned Judges in the latter case also seem to hold that the fact that a patta was granted by Government is no indication that another person found in possession has not permanent occupancy rights, but that a pattadar must show that the customary mode of holding land in that place justifies the presumption that the tenant has no permanent rights of occupancy. This question has been argued before me on two previous occasions, once in Second Appeal No. 684 of 1917 sitting with my learned brother and once in Anantha Padmanabha v. Gopalakrishnaier (3) sitting with Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar. On both occasions I declined to follow Veeranan Ambalam v. Annasawmi Iyer (1) and Venkatachala Goundan v. Rangaratnam Aiyar (2) to the extent to which the divta in those cases commit the learned Judges.

I am relieved from the necessity of considering the present case at any great length, because my attention has been drawn to an elaborate decision of Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar sitting with the learned Chief Justice, Ponniah Nadan v. Deivanai Ammal (4), with which I am in entire accord. My learned brother in that case, has, if I may venture to say so, applied what I think the most valuable test. He has treated the matter historically and has shown that Government in adopting the ryotwari system made their settlement with the cultivating ryot whom Government found on the land and treated him as the cultivating owner and intended him to remain as such. The system was intended to be in direct contrast with the Zemindari settlement, under which a number of persons who were in fact mere farmers of revenue were for the first time given an interest in the land but an interest subject to the existing rights of persons then cultivating the lands. I entirely agree with Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar that it is not open to us to raise presumptions against this history, and I agree with him that wherever we find that a permanent right of occupancy is claimed by a cultivating tenant, the burden should be cast on him to show how he became entitled to this right.

I do not propose to pursue the matter further but simply to say that after a careful examination of all the cases and a careful re hearing in this case, I adopt the views expressed by Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar in their entirety and would found my judgment on the reasons given by him in that case. It follows therefore that, in my opinion, the decision of Mr. Justice Spencer and Mr. Justice Krishnan in Muthusami Ayar v. Nainar Ammal (5) is incorrect and should not be followed. In the present case there is some small evidence of alienations by the 2nd defendant's predecessor, and also some evidence that rent has been received by the plaintiff from the 2nd defendant or his predecessors, which would indicate that although the plaintiff was at that time granting leases to persons in the position of the 1st defendant, he recognised the position of the 2nd defendant. Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar has argued that this evidence does not conclusively prove the above facts, but I do not think it necessary to examine this; for, even if the evidence is to be accepted in its entirety, it falls far short of evidence of a grant of permanent right of occupancy by the plaintiff or his predecessors.

At the last moment, the contention was put forward that no notice had been given to the 2nd defendant and that, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to eject him. Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar has met this by saying that his suit was brought against the 1st defendant, that he has never recognised any rights as tenant in the 2nd defendant and that if the 2nd defendant had set up that he was a tenant under the plaintiff which he did not, the plaintiff would have offered evidence of a previous denial of the plaintiff's title as far back as 1911, when the 2nd defendant demanded a patta from the Revenue authorities. In my opinion the 2nd defendant cannot be allowed to change his case at the last moment, after having pleaded absolute ownership in himself and denied the plaintiff's right of ownership as pattadar. I would, therefore, dismiss the second appeal with costs.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I agree that where a tenant under a ryotwari pattadar sets up a permanent right of occupancy, the burden of proving such right lies on him [see Chidambara Pillai v. Thiruvengadathiengar (6)]. As stated about the above decision by Subramania Aiyar, J., in Cheekati Zamindar v. Ranasooru Dhora (7): "The view of the learned Judges was that permanent holdings under ryotwari proprietors being unusual and exceptional, the onus is on the party setting up such a special kind of holding." I do not think that the circumstance that the pattadar figures as the plaintiff in the suit and seeks to eject the tenant places the onus of proof as regards the particular fact upon the plaintiff, that is, that he should prove the negative, that the tenant under him has not got the exceptional rights set up by the tenant. I respectfully dissent from those observations in Venkatachala Goundan v. Rangaratnam Aiyar (2) and Veeranan Ambalam v. Annasawmi Iyer (1) which are relied on by the appellant's learned Vakil Mr. S. Ramaswami Aiyar in support of his contention on this point.

As regards the question of notice to quit, the contesting 2nd defendant (the appellant) was allowed to intervene in the suit which was originally brought against the 1st defendant alone. The 2nd defendant was added in September 1914 (the suit having been brought in August 1914). The District Munsif ought to have then allowed and directed the plaintiff to amend the plaint (a) by the addition of the necessary allegations indicating the plaintiff's title to eject the newly added 2nd defendant, (b) by amending the relief paragraph (10) by adding the necessary reliefs prayed for against the 2nd defendant. Both sides, however, seem to have treated the plaint as so amended, and it was evidently understood between all parties and the Court that if the plaintiff established his proprietary right to the land and if the 2nd defendant's alleged permanent occupancy right was found against by the Court, the plaintiff's suit in ejectment against the 2nd defendant should be decreed on the basis that the amended plaint contained all the necessary allegations such as the service of a proper notice (to quit on the 2nd defendant if he was lessee or on the real lessee, if he was sub-lessee or a denial of the landlord's title before suit by the 2nd defendant or by the intermediate lessee, such allegations, if established, entitling the plaintiff to eject the 2nd defendant, even supposing that the 2nd defendant was a tenant from year to year or a sub-lessee from a lessee for years and not a mere trespasser. The 2nd defendant did not apply to the Munsif to raise any issue on the question of notice. This view is strengthened by the fact that the plea of absence of notice to quit was not raised in either of the Courts below and was not evidently thought of when the memorandum of second appeal was drafted in the first instance, as the ground has been inserted as an afterthought between the grounds Nos. 6 and 7 and marked 6 (a) in the memorandum of appeal.

In the result, I agree that the second appeal should be dismissed with the plaintiff's costs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 30—Wagering contract —"Kuri," whether wagering contract—Suit to recover money paid towards "kuri," whether maintainble.

Though a "kuri" as ordinarily conducted in Malabar is not a lottery, yet if some subscribes obtain as prizes amounts which are in excess of the amounts subscribed by them, it comes within the definition of lottery and a suit to recover money paid for such lottery is not enforceable. [p. 990, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Chowghat, in Small Cause Suit No. 607 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Petitioner.

—Ordinarily, in a Malabar kuri a subscriber gets back only what he subscribed. Here, one subscriber got more. It becomes a lottery or distribution by chance. The fact that other subscribers only got back the amounts subscribed without interest does not affect the question.

JUDGMENT.—It has been held in Kamakshi Achari v. Appavu Pillai (1) that a "kuri" as ordinarily conducted is not a lottery, inasmuch as each subscriber merely gets back his subscriptions in the form of a loan, and the only thing which is dependent on chance is the order in which the loans are received. In the present case, however, one subscriber at each of the first 99 drawings received something more than what he subscribed, the amounts varying from 4 annas to Rs. 24 12 0. No doubt all the other subscribers eventually got back their money without interest but that does not affect the case of those subscribers who got prizes in excess of their subscriptions.

The fact that the promoter of the kuri was liable to the remaining subscribers for the future subscriptions of the prize-winners does not alter the nature of the business, for the prize-winners themselves were under no such liability Although, therefore, it has been consistently held in this Court that a kuri as ordinarily conducted does not amount to a lottery, the present form of kuri appears to me to come within the definition of lottery (i. e.,) a distribution of prizes by lot, or chances, and I may refer to the English cases on the point [Taylor v. Smetten (2), Reg. v. Harris (3) and Willis v. Young (4)]. The prizes may by actuarial calculation be found to be approximately equivalent to the interest that might have been earned by the prize-winner in the ordinary form of kuri, but in the present case he is absolved from all risks attendant on earning such interest but gets his prize in ready cash. I, therefore, hold that the plaint kuri is a lottery in which some subscribers obtain prizes by lot and consequently plaintiff's suit to recover money paid for such lottery is not maintainable.

The petition is allowed and plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Gaya.

Messrs. P. C. Manuk, Rajendra Prasad and S. Saran, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Fakhruddin and Ragho Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—This is a second appeal against the decision of the District Judge of Gaya, dismissing an appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge. The facts are shortly as follows:—

In a certain revenue-paying estate there were three separate accounts Nos. 33, 26 and 31 and also a residuary share. When the March kist of 1915 became due, account No. 33 was in arrear to the extent of Rs. 3-10-0 and the residuary share was in arrear to the extent of Rs. 6 8 6. There was an excess, however, in respect of separate account Nos. 26 and 31 of Rs. 1-15-0 and 5 2 0 respectively. Sometimes in the month of April 1915 the arrear of Rs. 3-10-0 in respect of separate account No. 33 was paid with the permission of the Collector and this separate account was exempted from sale on the 1st of May 1915. When this payment of Rs. 3 10 0 was made and taking into account the excess which was in deposit in respect of separate accounts Nos. 26 and 31, there was no arrear in respect of the whole estate. In spite of this, however, the proceedings for sale of the residuary share went on and, eventually, it was sold and purchased by the plaintiff in this suit, Chhakowri Singh. After the sale, the proprietors of the estate applied to the Commissioner for annulment of the sale and he, on the ground that, at the time of the sale, the general account was not in arrears, set aside the sale. The auction-purchaser then brought this suit for a declaration that the ijmali share was sold for its own arrears of Government revenue and that a good title passed by the purchase; and further, he asked for a declaration that the plaintiff was entitled to obtain a certificate of title from the Collector of Gaya.

The suit was dismissed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge; on appeal this decision was confirmed and the plaintiffs have now preferred this second appeal.

Two points are urged before us: (1) that there was, in fact, an arrear and (2) that the Commissioner had no jurisdiction to set aside the sale

With regard to the first of these points, the argument on behalf of the appellant is that the crucial point of time for determining whether an estate is in arrears or not, is the kist day and that if payment is not made on that day the estate must be sold, unless there is an express order of exemption by the Collector. In this case the payment of Rs. 3-10 0 was made after sale proclamation in respect of the ijmali share had issued, there was no application for exemption of the ijmali share and no exemption was granted and, consequently, it is contended, even although the whole of the estate was not in arrears after the payment, the ijmali share not having been specially exempted, the estate was bound to be sold. I am unable to accept this contention. As soon as the Collector expressly exempted the separate account No. 33 from sale on payment of Rs. 3-10 0, this payment had the effect of clearing off the arrears in respect of the whole estate and, consequently, of the ijmali share. There was, therefore, in fact no arrear due on the whole estate and the ijmali share was no longer liable to be sold. For another reason also, the estate was not liable to sale. Although on the kist day there was a default, it did not, under section 2 of Act XI of 1859, become an arrear of revenue until the 1st of the following month and, under section 3 of the Act, the estate did not become liable to sale until the date fixed by the Board of Revenue. Now, the dates fixed by the Board of Revenue under section 3 of the Act are 28th June, 28th September, 12th January and 28th March. The present case is one of default at the time of the March kist. Under section 2 of the Act, therefore, there was no arrear of revenue until the 1st of April. This being so, the property did not become liable to sale until the next date fixed by the Board of Revenue under section 3 of the Act. The next date is the 28th June. Consequently, the estate did not become liable to sale until that date and the sale by the Collector before that date was illegal. I am supported in this view by Harkhoo Singh v. Bunsidhur Singh (1), a decision which, so far as I know, has never been dissented from.

This brings us to the next question, whether the Commissioner had jurisdiction to annul the sale. Under section 25 of the Act, the Commissioner has power to annul a sale, "which shall appear to him not to have been conducted according to the provisions of the said Acts," i.e., Act II (B. C.) of 1868 and Act XI of 1859; and under section 26 it is "competent to the Commissioner of Revenue on the ground of hardship or injustice to suspend the passing of final orders in any case of appeal from a sale and to represent the case to the Board of Revenue who, if they see cause, may recommend to the Local Government to annul the sale."

It is contended that the Commissioner can only act under section 25 when there has been a mistake in procedure and that in all other cases he must act under section 26 of the Act. I am not prepared to accept this argument, for it seems to me that the power given to the Commissioner under section 25 goes beyond procedure, but it is unnecessary to discuss this because this is a case of error in procedure. What happened was that the Mohurrir in charge of the register omitted to enter in the general account, as he should have done, that the payment of Rs. 3 10 0 had been made and the estate was consequently no longer in arrear. There can, therefore, be no question that the Commissioner had jurisdiction in this case.

In this view of the case the appeal must fail, but in any case it must have failed. The suit is one under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act and relief in such a case is discretionary with the Court. The Court will not grant relief, unless there is substantial injury and in this case there is no substantial injury. The appeal, therefore, fails and I would dismiss it with costs.

DAS, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply to the case of a purchaser who knew, at the date of the sale, that the sale did not convey to him the whole interest which it purported to convey.

Where a Hindu widow sold properties belonging to her and her co-widow and the purchaser knew of the co-widow's interest in the property:

Held, that the purchase would not operate on the interest which the vendor subsequently acquired in her co-widow's share.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 106 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Chingleput, in Original Suit No. 275 of 1913 (Original Suit No. 136 of 1913 on the file of the Principal District Munsif's Court, Poonammallee).

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar and B. Somayya, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It is found by the lower Appellate Court that the purchaser was fully aware of the interest of the co-widow of his vendor at the time of the purchase and that, accordingly, there was no erroneous representation to the purchaser that his vendor was authorized to transfer the interest of her co-widow.

The purchaser, therefore, accepted a sale-deed which he was aware did not transfer the interest which it purported to deal with. He was, therefore, not misled in any way and section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act, which is founded on the principles of estoppel, does not apply. Pandiri Bangaram v. Karumoory Subbaraju (1). The decision in Adikesavan Naidu v. Gurunatha Chetti (2) does not in any way affect Jandir Bangaram v. Karumoory Subbraju (1).

Over-valuation or under-valuation of suit—Decision by Court not having pecuniary jurisdiction—Appellate Court, interference by, limits of—Absence of findings on points raised, effect of—Prejudice.

The object of section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act is to prevent the operation of the general rule that neither consent nor waiver can confer jurisdiction on Courts which have under law only a limited pecuniary jurisdiction, in cases where there has been no prejudice on the merits. [p. 996, col. 1.]

In cases of over-valuation or under-valuation, the Appellate Court should not interfere with the decision given by the lower Court on the merits unless the disposal of the suit has been prejudicially affected. [p. 996, col. 1.]

Govinda Menon v. Karunakara Menon, 24 M. 43, followed.

Where a lower Court fails to determine material questions specifically raised before it, such failure amounts to a disposal prejudicially affecting the party, and the decree will be set aside. [p. 996, col. 1.]

Petitions under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the decrees of the Court of the District Munsif, Ranipet, dated the 1st November 1917, in Original Suits Nos. 220 and 221 of 1917.

These petitions coming on for hearing on 30th October 1918, the Court (Krishnan, J.,) delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The first point taken by the petitioners in this civil revision petition is that the lower Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit as it was beyond its pecuniary jurisdiction.

The point was taken in the lower Court but the Munsif rejected it, holding that for purposes of valuation the suit fell under section 7, clause 5 (a), of the Court Fees Act. In Madras, in the absence of rules under section 3 of the Suits Valuation Act, section 14 of the Madras Civil Courts Act, which says the value for Court-fees and for jurisdiction is the same, is in force as, under section 6 of the Suits Valuation Act, section 14 gets repealed only on the rules under section 3 taking effect. It is, therefore, necessary to decide under what part of section 7, clause 5, this suit falls. It seems to me quite clear that it really falls under clause (d) and not under clause (a). See Godavarthy Sundaramma v. Godavarthy Mangamma (1). It seems to me to be, therefore, desirable that there should be a finding on the question what the market-value of the suit property is, before disposing of this petition.

The other questions raised in the case, including the one raised by the respondents' Counsel under section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act will be held over for consideration after the finding is returned.

The District Munsif will return a finding as to the market-value of the suit property. Parties will be allowed to adduce fresh evidence on the point.

Eight weeks are allowed for the submission of findings and seven days for filing objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the District Munsif of Ranipet submitted the following FINDING.—I am directed to submit a finding as regards the market-value of the lands comprised in the two suits, Original Suits Nos. 220 and 221 of 1917, now before the High Court At the re-hearing the plaintiffs (respondents) did not adduce any oral evidence but merely filed Exhibit J, which is a copy of the plaint filed by the 1st defendant in the Temporary Sub-Court, Vellore. The defendants (petitioners) examined seven witnesses in addition—Defendants' witnesses Nos. 7 to 13, and filed Exhibits I to XIV.

2. Both the suits were heard together with the consent of parties. There are nine items comprised in Original Suit No. 220 of 1917, and there are eight items in Original Suit No. 221 of 1917. In Original Suit No. 220 of 1917, items Nos. 1 and 2 are dry lands and are 0-3-0 cawnie in extent; items Nos. 3 to 8 are wet, and the wet lands are of a total extent of 3-0-14 cawnies. Item No. 9 consists of tamarind trees, and the plaintiff Subrahmanya Gurukkal claims an undivided moiety therein. In Original Suit No. 221 of 1917, item No. 7 is dry and is 0-4-8 cawnie in extent; item No. 8 like item No. 9 in Original Suit No. 220 of 1917 is a moiety of the plaintiffs' right to the said tamarind trees; and items Nos. 1 to 6 are wet lands and are of a total extent of 3-2-6 cawnies.

3. The petitioners (defendants) have filed a number of sale-deeds, Exhibits I to VII and X to XIV; Exhibits V to VII are of recent dates, of the year 1918; but the other documents are between the years 1910 to 1917; and they show that a cawnie has been selling at not less than Rs. 1,000 nearly. The plaintiffs have not produced any sale-deed on their side; on the other hand Exhibit IV is a sale-deed by plaintiff Subrahmanya Gurukkal himself; that is dated 24th February 1916, under which document 0 3-0 cawnie has been sold for Rs. 187 8-0, thus working out a value of Rs. 1,000 a cawnie. Exhibit VIII is a rough sketch prepared by the petitioners (defendants) showing the lands comprised in the suits, and the lands comprised in some of the registered documents exhibited in the case. The lands covered by the sale deeds filed in the case are situate close to the plaint lands.

4. As regards the dry lands, the oral evidence is that they are worth Rs. 300 to Rs. 400 a cawnie; and as regards item No 9 in Original Suit No. 220 of 1917, and item No. 8 in Original Suit No. 221 of 1917, there are ten tamarind trees included therein; there are three other trees in common, included in item No. 3 in Original Suit No. 220 and item No. 1 in Original Suit No. 221; the latter also will have to be taken into account and valued, and the defendants' witnesses would give their value to be between Rs. 700 and Rs. 800; it is not clear whether all the trees are all big ones, or some are big and some not. On an average the value of each tamarind tree may be fixed at Rs. 30 and the value of these thirteen trees will thus be Rs. 390.

5. To turn to the oral evidence, defendants' 7th witness, Manikka Udayan, is a vendee under Exhibit I, and he proves his sale. Under Exhibit I, $\frac{3}{4}$th of a cawnie was purchased at Rs. 750. The son-in law of defendants' 8th witness is the vendee under Exhibit II, and he swears that the plaint lands are superior in quality, and the land "Rajagambheeram" is irrigated by a river channel. Defendants' 9th witness, Krishnappa Udayan, is a purchaser under Exhibit III, and the price he has paid works out at Rs. 1,422 a cawnie. The witness further swears that each cawnie of dry land would be worth Rs. 300 or Rs. 400. Defendants' 10th witness is the Revenue Inspector of Kamakur firka, and defendants' 11th witness has been the monigar of Kamakur for the past 19 years. Defendants' 10th witness proves Exhibit VIII, and would swear that the plaint wet lands in both the suits would be worth Rs. 7,000, and the dry lands would be worth Rs. 400 a cawnie, and he estimates the ten tamarind trees at Rs. 80 a tree. Defendants' 10th witness, Srinivasa Mudali, further swears that in Kamakur, where the plaint lands are situate, it is difficult to purchase a cawnie for less than Rs. 1,000 and that the price ranges from Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 1,300 a cawnie, but the witness has been in Kamakur only for the past two years and his knowledge of the value of the lands, he says, is based upon an inspection of the title-deeds of the parties, which the ryots would produce before him when they request for transfer of patta in their names. The monigar Krishnappa Udayan, defendants' 11th witness, pays an assessment of Rs. 100 and has got landed property in Kamakur. There is no reason suggested by plaintiffs why his evidence should not be given its full weight and accepted; he has attested the sales Exhibits II, VI and X. His evidence is that the wet lands are worth Rs. 1,200 and Rs. 1,500 if irrigated by a river channel, and the dry lands are worth Rs. 400 a cawnie. Defendants' 12th witness is another ryot of Kamakur paying also an assessment of Rs. 100. It is to him, we find, plaintiff sold under Exhibit IV. It was suggested in the course of cross examination of defendants' witnesses Nos. 7 to 9, that owing to competition, and for other considerations, a heavy price was paid for the sales Exhibits I to III, but we found that plaintiff himself sold under Exhibit IV 0-3-0 cawnie for Rs. 187-8 0, and Exhibits X to XIV are of the years 1910, 1911, 1913 and 1914; and they all show that lands have been sold for not less than Rs. 1,000 a cawnie, and defendants' witnesses Nos 11 and 12, two respectable ryots of Kamakur, swear that generally there is no keen competition for the purchase of lands in the village.

6. The plaintiffs, Subrahmanya Gurukkal and Sesha Gurukkal, do not enter into the witness-box, and adduce no evidence in rebuttal of the oral and documentary evidence adduced for the defendants (petitioners). The plaintiffs would content themselves with producing, as already observed, a copy of Exhibit J. Exhibit J is a copy of plaint filed by the present 1st defendant through the Manager of the Court of Wards on 31st August 1918, i. e, after the present civil revision petitions were filed in the High Court. That suit was filed by 1st defendant for a declaration that he is the trustee of the Temple at Kamakur, and the lands in question are the property of the temple, and for an injunction to restrain the plaintiffs in the present suits, Original Suits Nos. 220 and 221 of 1917, from taking possession of he plaint lands by virtue of the decree passed by this Court therein, and dated 1st November 1917. In the schedule of properties attached to the said plaint, the value of the lands in question including the tamarind tope is given as Rs. 2,500. The defendants say that the valuation is a mistake, and is due to oversight. That plaint was prepared by a Vakil at Vellore, and has been signed both by the Manager of the Court of Wards and by the Vakil. From a perusal of Exhibit J and the plaints and decrees in the two suits Original Suits Nos. 220 and 221 of 1917, we find that the valuation in Exhibit J, as sworn to by the defendants' 13th witness, has been taken, item for item, from the decrees in those cases. Defendants' 13th witness is a clerk under the Vakil who filed the plaint in Original Suit No. 45 of 1918, and he explains the mistake by stating that his Vakil, after the body of the plaint was drafted and approved by him, asked him (the clerk) to copy out the schedule of properties, from out of the decrees in Original Suits Nos. 220 and 221 of 1917, and he accordingly literally copied the valuation as given therein, and the valuation thus was due to a mistake and does not correctly represent the actual market-value of the lands. In the circumstances, the explanation furnished by defendants' 13th witness seems not improbable, and I accept the same. Exhibit J cannot thus be construed as favouring the plaintiffs.

7. Thus taking the several registered documents filed in the case, and all the circumstances into consideration, I should fix the market-value of each cawnie of wet land at Rs. 1,000 a cawnie, dry lands at Rs. 300 a cawnie, and the tamarind trees at Rs. 30 a tree. Calculating at the above rate, the market-value of items Nos. 1 and 2 in Original Suit No. 220 of 1917 comes to Rs. 55-4-0, items Nos. 3 to 8 to Rs. 3,054 11-0; and the value of a moiety of ten tamarind trees item No. 9 and a moiety of three tamarind trees in item No. 3 comes to Rs. 195. In all it coma to Rs. 3,305-15-0. In Original Suit No. 221 of 1917, items Nos. 1 to 6 are wet lands and the total extent is 3-2-6 cawnies; their value comes to Rs. 3,143-7-0 item No. 7 is dry land and its value at Rs. 300 a cawnie comes to Rs. 84-6-0. The value of item 8 tope—a moiety of the trees therein, and of a moiety of the three trees in item No. 1 comes to Rs. 195. Thus the market-value of items Nos. 1 to 8 in Original Suit No. 221 of 1917 comes to Rs. 3,427-13-0. My finding will thus be that the market value of the lands in Original Suit No. 220 of 1917 is Rs. 3,305 15-0, and of the lands comprised in Original Suit No. 221 of 1917 is Rs. 3,427-13-0. The connected records are herewith re submitted.

This petition came on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial.

Dr. Swaminathan, for the Petitioners.—The lower Court has fairly and correctly decided the case on the merits. Under section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act a mere wrong valuation ousting its jurisdiction is not a good ground for upsetting the decree.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, for the Respondents.—Section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act does not apply. The section applies only where, having an option as to valuation, the plaintiff gives an incorrect valuation. Here a wrong principle has been followed and there is only one mode of valuation. See Ghulam Akbar Khan v. Bakhat Bibi (2).

JUDGMENT.—The finding of the lower Court is that the property is worth Rs. 3,305 15 0 and Rs. 3,427-13 0 No objections have been filed. The suit is, therefore, clearly beyond the jurisdiction of the District Munsif.

It is argued by Dr. Swaminathan that under section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act the Court ought not to interfere unless it is of opinion that in addition to the suit being beyond the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the lower Court there has been prejudice on the merits and that in the present case the District Munsif has gone fully into the question and decided the case rightly. Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar contends that section 11 can only apply to cases where the plaintiff having an option as to valuation gives an incorrect valuation, and not to cases where the principle of valuation is incorrect and a wrong principle has been followed in cases where there is only one method by which the suit is to be valued. He refers to Ghulam Akbar Khan v. Bakhat Bibi (2).

I do not think there is anything in section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act which suggests the difference sought to be made by Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar. The words are general and the section refers to over-valuation and under-valuation. It does not matter how the same arises. The very object of section 11 is to prevent the operation of the general rule that neither consent nor waiver can confer jurisdiction on Courts which have under law only a limited pecuniary jurisdiction in cases where there has been no prejudice on the merits. In Govinda Menon v. Karunakara Menon (3) it was held that in cases of over-valuation or under-valuation the Appellate Court should not interfere unless the disposal of the suit has been prejudicially affected.

As regards the question of prejudice I am of opinion that the lower Court ought to have determined the question as to how far Original Suit No. 214 of 1917 on the file of the Ranipet Court rendered the present suit res judicata as regards the question of the date of dispossession and how far the present suit is barred by Order II. The affidavit of the defendants' Vakil in the lower Court, which has not been contradicted, shows that these points were raised in the course of the argument and noted by the Judge who, however, makes no reference to it in his judgment. I think the petitioner has been prejudiced by the Munsif not having dealt with all the questions raised which fairly arose out of the pleadings. The portion of the decree declaring plaintiffs' title to the land is clearly wrong as the suit was under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act.

I set aside the decree of the District Munsif and direct him to return the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. Costs will abide and follow the result.

Hindu Law—Widow, power of, to gift property for benefit of husband's soul—Reversioner, right of objection of—Burden of proof.

A gift of family property by a Hindu widow for the benefit of her husband's soul is permissible and is just as valid and binding on the reversioners as if the gift had been made for purposes of legal necessity. But a gift for such a purpose must not amount to an exorbitant or excessive portion of the whole property. [p. 997, col. 2]

Where in such a case the donor adduces evidence showing a prima facie case which would justify such a gift, it is for the objecting reversioner to prove that the property alienated was excessive and that, therefore, the gift was not justified. [p. 998, col 1.]

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a decision of the District Judge of Saran, dated the 4th February 1918, affirming a decision of the Subordinate Judge.

The plaintiff, who is described by the District Judge as a fairly well-to-do man with several houses of his own, is the next reversionary heir of the late Lalchand Ram, who died some years ago leaving a widow, the defendant No. 1, but no male issue, and who appears to have been a devout Hindu. During his lifetime he gave away much of his property for religious purposes. On the 7th May 1909 some 10 years after her husband's death, the defendant No. 1 executed a deed of gift of a house, part of the property inherited from her husband, in favour of Sheodip Misra, the defendant No. 2. A few years later, on the 10th November 1914, the defendant No. 2 executed a zarpeshgi deed in respect to the said house in favour of the defendant No. 3 for the sum of Rs. 1,000. It appears from the evidence that the defendant No. 2, the original donee, had spent money in repairing the house, amounting to some Rs. 200 or Rs. 300, before the zarpeshgi deed was effected. Shortly afterwards, on the 12th January 1915, the plaintiff, although up to that time he appears to have taken no steps to get the deed of gift set aside, instituted the present suit claiming a declaration that the deed of gift of the 7th May 1909 executed by the widow in favour of the defendant No. 2 was without legal necessity and fraudulently executed and not binding upon him as reversioner of Lalchand Ram. The defence to the action was that the gift was made on the anniversary of her husband's sradh and was for his spiritual benefit and that a gift of such a nature was, according to Hindu Law, justifiable on the part of the widow.

The District Judge found that the widow gave the house in question to the defendant, No. 2 who is a Brahmin, on the anniversary of her husband's death and that she did so with religious motives. It is not disputed that it is competent to a Hindu widow to alienate portions of the family property for religious purposes and more particularly if the gift should be conducive to the spiritual welfare of her late husband. The plaintiff by his plaint alleged that the resources of the family were not such as to justify the gift of property of such value. The intrinsic value of the property itself is not great and according to the finding of the lower Court there was no evidence on the record to show that, at the time of the gift in question, the widow had no other property which she inherited from her husband than the disputed house, and, as far as can be gathered from the judgments of both the lower Courts, there does not appear to have been any direct evidence as to the actual extent of the family property held by the widow at the time of the gift. In dealing with this aspect of the case, the District Judge said that, apparently, all that passed to the widow from her late husband was this house. If, as a fact, there was no evidence on the record to show that the widow at that time had no other property inherited from her husband than the house in question, it is difficult to see how the District Judge arrived at this conclusion. It is not a distinct finding of fact that the widow had no other property and I think it was, in all probability, a view taken by him as to the probable state of affairs owing to the absence of any evidence upon the subject. Both the Subordinate Judge and the District Judge dismissed the suit. The former held that the gift in question was for the benefit of the soul of the late Lalchand Ram and as such was properly made by his widow on the day of the first barkhi sradh of her deceased husband. He, however, thought that, even if it was the only property in her possession, she would, even then, be justified in alienating it for such a purpose. The District Judge also found that the alienation was a religious one made by the widow to benefit the soul of her deceased husband and that such an alienation was valid. He did not decide the question of whether the gift would be valid if it were a gift of an unreasonable and excessive portion of the estate, although he mentions the point as having been raised and adds, as already stated, that the house was apparently all that passed into the widow's hands at the date of her husband's death. He thought, however, that the plaintiff's only object in bringing the suit was to give vent to his annoyance at the fact that the defendant No. 3 had acquired the zarpeshgi interest in the property. The judgment is not altogether satisfactory. There can be no doubt that a gift of family property by a Hindu widow for the benefit of her husband's soul is permissible and is just as valid and binding on the reversioners as if the gift had been made for the purposes of legal necessity. This, however, is subject to the rule discussed in the case of Pannachand Chhotalal v. Manoharlal Nandlal (1) that the gift for such purposes must not amount to an exorbitant or excessive portion of the whole property. In the present case it is stated by the Subordinate Judge that there was no evidence as to whether the widow possessed other property in addition to the house in question and the District Judge has not, in terms, found otherwise. In this state of affairs, as I have already indicated, I think it must be taken that when he says there was apparently no other property which passed to the widow, all he meant was that, so far as the evidence went, there was nothing to show that she had any other property.

The question which then arises is, whether, in the absence of any evidence upon this matter, the plaintiff or the defendants ought to succeed. The onus was certainly upon the defendants in the first instance to adduce evidence showing a prima facie case which would justify the gift. This, I think, they did when they proved that the gift was for the spiritual benefit of the deceased. It then lay upon the plaintiff to make out that the property alienated for such a purpose was excessive and, therefore, not justified. In this respect it would appear that the plaintiff failed to establish the case which he set up in his pleadings that the resources of the family were not such as to justify the gift of property of the value of that in question. For this reason I think this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 24—Muhammadan Law—Shia Law—Minor girl—Guardian appointed of person and property—Marriage of minor—Sanction of Court, whether necessary—Right of minor to select bridegroom.

Where a guardian has been appointed by the Court of the property and person of a minor girl, it is within the competency of the District Judge to sanction her marriage with a particular bridegroom. Such sanction is not only ordinarily desirable, but is necessary for the purpose of determining the suitability of the proposed bridegroom. Under the Shia law such a minor girl, who has attained puberty and the age of discretion, has an absolute right to marry the man of her choice, subject always to the superintendence, and, if necessary, the veto of the District Judge in his capacity of parens patriæ by delegation from the Sovereign. [p. 999, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Muzafferpur.

Mr. Kurshed Husnain, for the Appellant-Petitioner.

Messrs. Sultan Ahmad and Hasan Jan, for the Respondent and the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This matter arises out of a proposal of marriage made by Musammat Mustafa Begum in respect of Umatus Sogra, her grand-daughter by her daughter Musammat Kaniz Fatima.

The application was made on the 8th of January 1918 before the District Judge of Muzafferpur.

It appears that Musammat Umatus Sogra's father and mother are dead, and that in 1914 the District Judge appointed as the guardian of her person and property her paternal grandmother Musammat Abbasi Begum in conformity with the directions contained in the Will of the minor's father. It is alleged on behalf of Musammat Mustafa Begum that notwithstanding the appointment of a Court guardian the girl has never been in the custody of Musammat Abbasi Begum, that she has since her father's death continuously resided in the house of Mustafa Begum at Muzafferpur, that she has been educated by her and that she is desirous of marrying one Mohammad Hussain who is connected with the family of Musammat Mustafa Begum.

When the application of the 8th January 1918 was filed by Musammat Mustafa Begum, Musammat Abbasi Begum filed a counter-application before the District Judge objecting to the marriage and suggesting that the girl should be married to Akhtar Hussain, the son of one Nazir Husain, residing at Muzafferpur.

The District Judge on the 17th February 1919 disposed of both applications by an order in which he held that neither the paternal nor the maternal grandmother could be a guardian for marriage under the Shia Law to which the minor is subject.

At this time he also had before him a petition purporting to come from Musamma

Umatus Sogra herself and alleging that she had attained the age of puberty and discretion and that she desired to marry Mohammad Hussain.

In regard to this petition the District Judge ordered an enquiry for the purpose of definitely ascertaining the wishes of the minor, and appointed Khan Bahadur Ahmad Hussain and Moulvi Muhammad Shafi, two Pleaders of the Muzafferpur Bar, to make the necessary inquiries. The report of these gentlemen was submitted on the 27th February 1919.

On the 19th March 1919 in consequence of an application made on the 15th of March by Musammat Abbasi Begum, the District Judge recorded an order refusing to allow Musammat Abbasi Begum permission to cross-examine the two Commissioners, and to adduce evidence for the purpose of showing that their statements of the wishes of the minor were incorrect.

On the 31st March 1919 the District Judge disposed of the application of Musammat Umatus Sogra by an order granting sanction to her proposed marriage with Mohammad Hussain. On the same day he passed an order refusing the prayer of Abbasi Begum for the delivery of the body of Musammat Umatus Sogra to her care and custody.

Against this part of the learned District Judge's order which purports to have been made under section 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act, Musammat Abbasi Begum has filed Appeal No. 106 of 1919. Against the order of the 31st March 1919 she has preferred a motion which has been numbered as No 87 of 1919. Against the orders of the 17th February and 19th March 1919 she has preferred the motions which have been numbered 96 and 97 of 1919.

Now the first question to be considered is what are the powers of Musammat Umatus Sogra in the matter.

It has been found as a fact by the learned District Judge that she has attained puberty and the age of discretion. She has, therefore, under the Shia Law an absolute right to marry the man of her choice, subject always to the superintendence, and, if necessary, the veto of the District Judge in his capacity as parens patriæ by delegation from the Sovereign.

It is contended by Mr. Khurshed Husnain that the Judge has no power to sanction a marriage, though he may always restrain a ward from marking an unsuitable choice. In my opinion the Court has not only jurisdiction but it is its bounden duty, when apprised of a proposed marriage, to examine the fitness of the bridegroom and to advise the ward to the best of his ability. The power to veto the marriage implies necessarily the power to approve, and by recording the order of sanction in the present case he has done nothing whatsoever which can justify our interference under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. The case is still stronger where the minor herself, although she has made her choice, seeks the advice of the Court as a matter of courtesy, and I take it that the law contemplates that the welfare of the minor demands that no marriage should be performed without previous notice to the Court.

On the point of jurisdiction, therefore, it seems to me that the contention of Mr. Khurshed Husnain is not well-founded and must fail.

The next question is, whether it is a fact that the lady has arrived at the age of puberty and discretion.

Now in revision it is not ordinarily our practice to go into questions of fact; but a very strenuous argument has been addressed to us as to the various irregularities committed by the learned District Judge in appointing the two Vakils as Commissioners and in accepting their statement without any cross-examination in Court.

It has also been suggested that the proper course was for the Judge himself to have ordered the production of the minor in Court so that he might ascertain her wishes at first hand.

Now having regard to the customs of this part of the country and the status of the family to which the parties belong, we take it that it would have been impossible to secure the attendance of the minor in Court or to arrange that she should have been seen by the presiding officer himself. The Court adopted under the circumstances the procedure best suited to the object in view. He appointed two most respectable gentlemen who were personally known to him, one of them being a Khan Bahadur and a member of the Legislative Council. From the record of their proceedings I am quite satisfied that there can be no shadow of reason for suspecting that they were actuated by any improper motives in the matter. It appears from the record that Syed Ahmad Hussain, who though not a relation has known the girl from her childhood and is addressed as dada or grandfather, took the girl into a room by herself and put questions to her; the answers being recorded by Moulvi Muhammad Shafi who was sitting at the door. Nobody who reads these answers can fail to draw the inference that they give an accurate statement of what she said and that they represent her own views with regard to the choice of a husband. A certificate to this effect has also been appended by the two gentlemen themselves. In the statement the girl says that she is sixteen years of age, and on being asked whether she wishes to marry the eldest son of Qasim Mian or the youngest son of Nazir Mian and on being warned that her choice would affect her whole future and was to be made after the most anxious consideration, she answered, "I would like to make a marriage with Qasim Mian's eldest son." She was then asked whether she had spoken under the influence of any one else, that is to say, her paternal or maternal grandmother, and her answer again was, "No. I have said so of my own free will."

Under these circumstances it is impossible to hold that the learned Judge was not right in believing that the considered decision of Musammat Umatus Sogra was to marry Mohammad Hussain and to refuse the proposal of Akhtar Hussain.

As to her age and as to the fact of her having attained puberty, the report gives adequate grounds for holding that the finding of the District Judge was correct.

Under these circumstances the suggestion that we should remit the case for the examination of witnesses in Court is one which we cannot accept.

It has been stated by Mr. Khurshed Husnain that Syed Ali Nawab, the husband of Musammat Mustafa Begum, is opposed to the marriage, and that he being the nearest and eldest male relative on either side the omission of the learned District Judge to consult him vitiates his finding.

We have no definite information of the wishes of this gentleman in the matter. If any reliance is to be placed upon the affidavit furnished by Musammat Mustafa Begum, it would seem that he in 1916 was in favour of the marriage. However, we do not attach any importance to his wishes, because the District Judge had jurisdiction to decide upon the suitability of Mohammad Hussain and in the absence of anything to the contrary he has, in our opinion, given a very proper decision. The proposed bridegroom is a B. A. and is reading for the B. L. degree. There is a disparity of about ten years between him and his bride, but this, in the circumstances, is not a very great disadvantage.

We have been asked by Mr. Khurshed Husnain to prescribe directions as to the procedure which should be followed in regard to proposals for the marriage of wards of Court. We consider it unnecessary to lay down any hard and fast procedure, but we may say that we approve generally of the procedure laid down by their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Monijan Bibi v. District Judge of Birbhoom (1). We have given effect to the principles followed in that case in holding that ordinarily the sanction of the Court is desirable, if not necessary, for the purpose of determining the suitability of the proposed bridegroom. The procedure suggested by their Lordships is one which commends itself to reason and is not contrary to law and consequently, in our opinion, it should, wherever possible, be followed.

In this view of the case the applications for revision in Cases Nos. 87, 96 and 97 of 1919 must be dismissed.

With regard to Appeal No. 106 of 1919, no doubt under ordinary circumstances the guardian appointed by the Court would have the right to the custody of the person of the minor; but as she has attained puberty and is of the age of discretion, her marriage with Mohammad Hussain will immediately make Mohammad Hussain the lawful guardian of her person and that being so, it is undesirable that we should direct her to be delivered into the custody of Musammat Abbasi Begum.

(1) 25 Ind. Cas. 229; 42 C. 351; 20 C. L. J. 91; 19 C. W. N. 290.

There is also the further ground that according to the finding of the learned Judge the girl has for a long time been in the custody of Musammat Mustafa. The petition of Musammat Abbasi Begum does not disclose how or when the girl was removed from her custody, and we think that there is ground for the suggestion of the opposite party that she has not for many years been in the custody of the guardian appointed by the Court.

Taking all the circumstances into consideration we do not think that we should, under section 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act, compel the minor to reside at present with Musammat Abbasi Begum.

The appeal and the motions are dismissed with costs. There will be one hearing fee in all these matters, assessed at five gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

Section 12 of the Court Fees Act has no application where the valuation is made by the Court for the purpose of determining the question whether the suit is within the pecuniary limits of the Court's jurisdiction.

Where, on the basis of such valuation, a plaint is returned for presentation to the proper Court, an appeal lies against the order under Order XLIII, rule 1 (a), Civil Procedure Code.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the District Court of Vizagapatam, in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 14 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Rajam, in Original Suit No. 2 of 1917.

Mr. V. Suryanarayana, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. T. V. Venkataroma Aiyar and Y. Suryanarayana, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, who is the appellant, valued the lands referred to in the plaint at Rs. 100 and filed the suit in the District Munsif's Court. Objection was taken as to jurisdiction on the ground that the lands were greatly undervalued and that their proper value was beyond the Court's pecuniary jurisdiction. The District Munsif found on the evidence that the lands were worth Rs. 4,000 and ordered the plaint to be returned for presentation to the proper Court.

This order returning the plaint is appealable under Order XLIII, rule 1, clause (a), and an appeal was filed in the District Court. The District Judge, relying on section 12, clause 1, of the Court Fees Act, held that no appeal lay as the decision of the District Munsif as to the valuation was final.

I am of opinion that the decision of the District Judge cannot be supported. As was pointed in Peari Shah v. Surja Mal (1), section 12 of the Court Fees Act has no application where the valuation is made by the Court for the purpose of determining the question whether the suit is within the pecuniary limits of the Court's jurisdiction. All the authorities have been reviewed by Mookerjee and Holmwood, JJ., and I entirely agree with the decision, which is in accordance with the view taken by this Court in Annamalai Chetti v. Cloete (2) and Kanaran v. Komappan (3).

I set aside the decree of the lower Court and direct it to dispose of the appeal according to law. Respondents will pay appellant's costs.

Court-fees—Cross-objection, value of—Declaration in respect of mortgage sought to be set aside—Ad valorem fee.

Where the object of a cross-objection is to have a declaration in respect to a mortgage set aside, the proper value of the cross-objection, for the purpose of Court-fees, is the value of the mortgage.

FACTS.—The plaintiff, who was a Hindu presumptive reversioner, brought the suit for possession of the property in dispute with a declaration that the mortgage executed by the widow of the deceased owner of the property was not binding on him and that the mortgage decree obtained on the mortgage and the subsequent sale thereunder was invalid and infructuous so far as he was concerned. The defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5 were the transferees from the auction-purchaser in execution of the mortgage-decree. They contended, among other things, that the mortgage executed by the widow was binding on the plaintiff. The first Court disallowed the plaintiff's suit for possession but gave a declaration that the mortgage was not binding on him. The plaintiff appealed and the defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5 filed a cross-objection on the ground that the mortgage-bond was binding on the plaintiff as reversioner. The property involved was worth Rs. 13,300. Defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5 were zarpeshgidars on behalf of the auction-purchaser and their zarpeshgi was Rs. 12,300. The original mortgage of 1896 executed by the widow, which the plaintiff wanted to have declared as not binding on him, was for Rs. 1,900 only. Defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5 paid a Court-fee of Rs. 10 only on the cross-objection. The Stamp Reporter submitted that if the declaration given by the Court of first instance would be set aside, the defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5 would be benefited by Rs. 12,300, and, therefore, they should pay ad valorem Court-fees on that amount. The Taxing Officer considering the case of some importance referred it to the Taxing Judge.

Messrs. Susil Madhab Mullick, Jitendra Nath Sen Gupta and Narendra Nath Sen, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Rajendra Prasad, Sambhu Saran and Nirsu Narayan Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference by the Taxing Officer. A Hindu widow mortgaged two properties. A suit was brought by the mortgagee who obtained a decree and in execution purchased the mortgaged properties. We are in this case concerned with only one of these properties, which was purchased for Rs. 826. After the auction sale the decree-holder auction-purchaser sold this property to one Baldeo Sahai, who in his turn mortgaged it to Sri Kishun Sahu, Sitaram Sahu and Durga Prasad (defendants-respondents Nos. 3, 4 and 5). The present suit was then instituted by the presumptive reversioners for possession of the property and also for a declaration that the mortgage by the widow and all subsequent transactions were invalid. The prayer for possession has been disallowed in the Court of first instance, the only relief granted being a declaration that the mortgage by the widow was not binding on the plaintiffs. Against this decree the plaintiffs have appealed and a cross-objection has been filed by the defendants-respondents Nos. 3, 4 and 5 in regard to the declaration. It is with the Court-fee to be paid on the cross-objection that we are concerned, and the point for consideration is whether the value of the cross-objection should be the value of the mortgage in regard to which the declaration was obtained, or whether it should be the value of the cross-objectors' mortgage which was for a sum very much greater than the mortgage by the widow. It is true that if the declaration is set aside, the cross-objectors may be benefited to a much greater extent than the value of the declaration, but this is not a matter with which we are concerned. All that is asked for is that the declaration in regard to the widow's mortgage should be set aside and the value of this mortgage, in my opinion, is the proper value of the cross-objection.

Order accordingly.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Madura, in Original Suit No. 9 of 1916 (Original Suit No. 29 of 1915 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Madura).

Messrs. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri and T. S. Ramaswami Aiyar, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Rangachariar, Messrs. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar and B. Sitarama Row, for the Respondents.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 8th and 9th August 1918, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—We are not satisfied that the learned Subordinate Judge has sufficiently considered the bearing of all the material evidence in this case on the questions whether there was a bona fide dispute which was settled by the compromise embodied in Exhibit A and the partition deed Exhibit C or a fair family settlement. He has not considered the effect of the evidence as to the property, which is the subject of the present suit and in the hands of the alienee, having been the separate property of Mailchamy and his branch, having come to them from their grandmother's father, the Zemindar of Ayakudi. He has also not considered with reference to the question of bona fides the evidence as to whether the two branches were divided or not. This evidence must be taken into account in order to arrive at a conclusion whether the compromise now in question was really a bona fide compromise of doubtful claims or a fair family settlement. Before disposing of the case, we must call for a fresh finding on these questions. We leave it to the discretion of the learned Subordinate Judge to decide whether fresh evidence should be taken.

We direct the Subordinate Judge to return findings on the following issues:—

1. Was the property in dispute the separate property of Mailchamy?

2. Were Mailchamy and Mandalathipathi undivided?

3. Was there a bona fide dispute which was settled by Exhibits A and C or did they amount to a fair family arrangement? In considering this question the evidence as to the existence of a Will by Mailchamy leaving property to be divided into three shares, will also have to be considered.

Two months will be allowed for the submission of the finding and seven days for objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Madura submitted the following

FINDINGS.—The High Court having remanded the case for finding on the following issues, viz :—

(i) Whether the property in dispute is the separate property of Mailchamy and his branch, having come to them from their grandmother's father the Zemindar of Ayakudi?

(ii) Were Mailchamy and Mandalathipathi undivided?

(iii) Was there a bona fide dispute which was settled by Exhibits A and C or did they amount to any family arrangement?

I submit the following findings :—

1. issue 1.—The suit properties consist of 8 items. Of these, items Nos. 6 and 8 are house properties and the rest are lands. It is not clearly stated in the plaint how the suit properties are the separate properties of Mailchamy and his branch. Plaintiffs' Vakil says that it is never the plaintiffs' case that the properties are Manjakkani properties of Mailchamy's grandmother Madamma, but their case is that they are the self-acquisition of Mailchamy in his own lifetime, having been given to him by the Zamindar of Ayakudi on account of love and affection towards him. I shall, therefore, consider whether the properties were the self-acquisition of Mailchamy in his own lifetime. In support of their contention, plaintiffs examined Sivaswami Pillai (plaintiff witness No. 10), who was Karnam of Ayakudi. They also rely on the statement, Exhibit LL, filed by the 3rd defendant in the criminal proceedings and on the descriptions contained in the documents Exhibits CC, DD, G and E executed by Mailchamy. Sivaswami Pillai (plaintiff witness No. 10) says in his chief examination that items Nos. 1, 2 and 7 (which are situate in the block called Panchanthangi and irrigated by Papan channel) and also items Nos. 4 and 5 (which are Combai Punjai) were given to Mailchamy by the Zemindar. Third defendant also in her statement (Exhibit LL) stated that the suit properties were given to her father-in law Mailchamy by the Zemindar. But the statement of these two witnesses is worthless. Plaintiffs' witness No. 10 admitted in his cross-examination that he had no personal knowledge of the alleged gift to Mailchamy by the Zemindar. Third defendant also had no personal knowledge, and in the plaint, Exhibit M, which she subsequently filed, she ceased to mention that the suit properties were her father-in-law's self-acquisition. As regards items Nos. 2 to 6 and 8, Mailchamy himself nowhere described them as his self-acquisition. He was describing as his self-acquisition only items Nos. 1 and 7 (for the description of item No. 1, see Exhibits CC, DD, G and for description of item No. 7; see Exhibit C). To consider that at least these two items Nos. 1 and 7 were his self-acquisition, I do not think that the mere recitals in the above said documents are sufficient in the absence of any other corroborating evidence. I, therefore, hold that none of the suit properties are the self-acquisition of Mailchamy in his lifetime. They are not either Manjakkani properties (Streedhanam) of Mailchamy's grandmother according to the plaintiffs' Vakil's own admission.

2. Issue 2.—Then with regard to the second question, there is no direct evidence, either oral or documentary, on the point of division set up by the plaintiffs. The matter is to be judged merely from circumstantial evidence. It is conceded on all hands that Mandalathipathi's father and grandfather lived at Balasamudram and remained in possession of the properties there, while Mailchamy and his father lived at Ayakudi and remained in possession of the properties situate in that village. It is also in evidence that the patta for Ayakudi lands stood in the name of Mailchamy (vide pattas T series) and that he alone was paying the taxes on those lands and also on the houses situate in that village (vide receipts Exhibits U, W, Y series), while the patta for Balasamudram lands stood in the name of Mandalathipathi's father (vide receipts Exhibit L) and after his death in the name of Mandalathipathi (vide patta Exhibit SS). Also each branch was alienating the properties in its separate possession as its own. To begin with the alienations of Balasamudram properties by Mandalathipathi's branch alone, Mandalathipathi's father executed in 1865 two mortgages of some ancestral lands at Balasamudram as if they belonged to him exclusively, and died in 1868 (vide recitals in Exhibit L). Afterwards Mandalathipathi's mother as guardian of Mandalathipathi discharged these two debts by selling away the mortgaged lands for Rs. 8,000 (vide sale-deed Exhibit L). Mandalathipathi's mother as his guardian sold away also one ancestral house in 1873 under sale-deed Exhibit H, as if it belonged to Mandalathipathi's branch alone. Mandalathipathi himself after he attained majority executed a mortgage of all the remaining ancestral lands at Balasamudram as if they were his own (vide mortgage-deed Exhibit M) and lent the money so raised on that mortgage to a certain Muhammadan, Kadir Lebbai (vide Exhibit AA), without the concern of Mailchamy. Similarly from 1881, Mailchamy alone commenced to make alienations of the ancestral properties at Ayakudi in his possession as if they were his own (vide mortgages and sale-deed—Exhibits Q, R, NN, OO, and CC). All these circumstances—the separate living of the two families from the time of Mandalathipathi's grandfather, separate possession and enjoyment of separate properties by each branch, separate pattas and separate payment of kists and separate dealings with the separate properties in their respective possessions as if they were their own properties—all these clearly indicate that the two branches must have become divided both in status and estate at least so far back as 1865.

3 It is argued by the defendants' Vakil that the two branches might be joint and the alienations made by Mandalathipathi's father in his time and those made after his death by Mailchamy might be in their capacity as the then family managers. But the subsequent conduct of Mandalathipathi and his mother leaves no room for any such supposition. If the two families were undivided, Mailchamy as the senior member and manager would be the proper person to execute Exhibits L and H either singly or jointly with Mandalathipathi's mother. But instead of that we find Mandalathipathi's mother alone executing those deeds as guardian of Mandalathipathi and treating him as the absolute owner of Balasamudram properties. As above pointed out, Mandalathipathi also after attaining majority considered himself to be the absolute owner of the properties situate at Balsamudram. He got the patta for Balasamudram lands issued in his name and he sold away some of those properties and mortgaged some, without reference to Mailchamy. Such cannot be the case if the two families were joint and Mailchamy was the manager after the death of Mandalathipathi's father.

4. Defendants' Vakil next argues that the properties described as ancestral and dealt with under Exhibits H, L, K and M might have been the self acquisition of either Mandalathipathi's grandfather or father, and not derived from the common ancestor, and that Mandalathipathi and his parents, therefore, rightly dealt with those properties without reference to Mailchamy. But there is no proof that the properties so dealt with were the self-acquisition of Mandalathipathi's grandfather or father.

5. Then with regard to the evidence on the defence side, defendants have absolutely no evidence whatever to show that the income from the lands of the two villages was ever mixed together and used by both families for common purposes during the lifetime of Mandalathipathi's father and grandfather. To prove jointness defendants rely mainly on the fact that during his minority Mandalathipathi lived with Mailchamy and that the latter then managed the properties in the two villages. Mandalathipathi lost his father in 1869 and mother in 1876. At the time of the death of his mother he was about $7\frac{1}{2}$ years old. Defence witnesses Viswanatha Monigar (defence witness No. 1), Suppiah Chetti (defence witness No. 3), Sankaralingam Pillai (defence witness No. 4), Venkatagiri Nainavaru (defence witness No. 6) and also 3rd defendant (defence witness No. 7) say that since his mother's death and until 1896 Mandalathipathi lived at Ayakudi with Mailchamy. Defence witnesses Nos. 1 and 2 further say that Mailchamy then managed also the lands at Balasamudram and received the paddy from those lands. That Mandalathipathi lived with Mailchamy for sometime after his mother's death is admitted also by plaintiffs' eleventh witness (Chithanaha Vadhiar) and by Mailchamy himself in his written statement Exhibit KK-1. But I do not attach any special importance to this circumstance. It may be that Mailchamy took Mandalathipathi into his protection and looked also after his lands, seeing that he lost both his parents and there was no other to take care of him. This was what Mailchamy stated in Exhibit KK 1. There is not a single document to show that Mailchamy treated Balasamudram properties as his own even during that period.

6. During the time Mandalathipathi lived with Mailchamy, Mailchamy attested two sale-deeds (Exhibits J and K) executed by Mandalathipathi in respect of the ancestral houses at Balasamudram. Similarly Mandalathipathi attested usufructuary mortgage (Exhibit BB) and a sale deed (Exhibit Z) of Ayakudi lands executed by Mailchamy. Further Mandalathipathi having owed some rent to the mortgagee under Exhibit BB, Mailchamy undertook to pay it on Mailchamy's behalf (vide Exhibit XV). Defendants contend that these acts indicate that Mailchamy and Mandalathipathi had joint interest in all the properties situate in both the villages. But mere attestations alone of each other's documents do not signify any such thing.

At no time they executed or took any document in their joint names. Then about Mailchamy's undertaking to pay the rent due by Mandalathipathi, it is not known under what circumstances he had so undertaken. The above circumstances are, therefore, not sufficient to warrant an inference of jointness.

7. Defendants rely also on the written statement Exhibit KK-1 put in by Mailchamy in answer to Mandalathipathi's plaint Exhibit KK. But I do not think that statement helps them in any way. No doubt Mailchamy has not expressly stated in Exhibit KK-1 that there was any regular partition between the two families. But he openly denied that the two families were joint and alleged that the sole and independent enjoyment by each branch of the properties in their respective possession from several years operated as a virtual or de facto division. That appears to be his plea by reading together paragraphs 4 and 5 of that statement.

8. Such is the evidence on both sides. In my opinion, the whole evidence and inferences from facts proved are consistent only with the hypothesis of separation of the two branches in estate also long before the death of Mandalathipathi's father. My finding then is that Mailchamy and Mandalathipathi were not joint.

9. Coming now to the question whether the Will set up by the 3rd defendant is true, Viswanatha Monigar (defence witness No. 1), Suppiah Chetti (defence witness No. 2), Sankaralingam Pillai (defence witness No. 4) and the 3rd defendant (defence witness No. 7) say that Mailchamy died on 14th May 1901, that four days before his death, i.e., on 10th May he executed a Will by which he bequeathed all his properties equally to his daughter (the 1st defendant), daughter-in-law (the 3rd defendant) and nephew (Mandalathipathi) and that the said Will was written by one Perumalswami Naicken and attested by defendants witnesses Nos. 1, 2 and 4 and 15 others. Venkatagiri Nainavaru (defendant witness No. 6) says that he came to Ayakudi on the next day after the execution of the Will, that Mailchamy then mentioned the Will to him and that it was also read over to the witness. But the evidence of these witnesses is interested and conflicting. Defendant witnesses Nos. 1 and 2 hold decrees against the 2nd defendant and it is, therefore, their interest to see that the 2nd defendant is not deprived of the plaint properties. Defendant witness No. 4 is indebted to the 4th defendant. Defendant witness No. 6 is a near relation of the 3rd defendant, and it was he who conducted all the criminal proceedings on behalf of the 3rd defendant and also the suit of 1902. Defendant witness No. 4 says that Mailchamy divided his properties among the three legatees and that three lists showing the properties given to each legatee were prepared along with the Will. But defendant witness No. 1 does not say that any such division was made and lists were prepared. In her plaint, Exhibit MM, 3rd defendant set up that her father-in-law made another Will previously on the 7th May 1901, by which he bequeathed all his properties equally to her and her daughter alone. But that prior Will is now denied. The first mention of the Will now in question was made by the 3rd defendant only in her plaint (Exhibit MM) filed in February 1902 after a long interval of nine months. It was never put forward before. The reason given by the defendant's witnesses for its non registration is that at the instigation of Mandilathipathi, Perumalswami Naicken duped the defendants Nos. 1 and 3 by saying that the Registrar would come. But it is not a satisfactory reason. Mailchamy would not have allowed Perumalswami Naicken to make any delay.

10. On the plaintiffs' side plaintiff witness No. 1 (1st defendant) denies that any Will was executed by her father. Also plaintiff and plaintiff witness No. 11 (Palace Tutor) say that Mailchamy did not execute any Will before his death. For the above reasons I find that the alleged Will is not true.

11. Issue 3.—I have found that the two branches were divided. Neither the 1st defendant nor Mandalathipathi could have been in ignorance or in doubt as to that fact. After he had attained majority, Mandalathipathi got the patta for Balasamudram lands issued in his name and mortgaged those lands as if they were his own. He thus considered himself to be a divided member. Third defendant also cannot be said to have any honest and bona fide belief in the claim she was making. I, therefore, hold that the compromise (Exhibit A) and the subsequent partition deed (Exhibit C) were not bona fide, nor can they be properly called a family settlement.

This appeal came on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Court on the 28th April 1919.

JUDGMENT.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The property in suit was last in the possession of one Mailchamy who died in May 1901. He left behind him a daughter, a daughter-in-law of a predeceased son and one Mandalathipathi, a distant cousin. This cousin was living with the deceased for some years before his death. After his death disputes arose regarding succession to his property. The daughter-in-law put forward a Will alleged to have been executed by Mailchamy, under which she claimed that she was entitled to a third of his property. The Magistrate who enquired into the claim as to possession decided against her. Thereupon she sued to establish her one-third share in the properties. The daughter of Mailchamy, who is the 1st defendant in the suit, denied that the property was the separate property of Mailchamy and also the genuineness of the Will. Mandalathipathi on the other hand claimed the property to have come to him by survivorship as he and Mailchamy were undivided. During the course of the trial, the parties entered into a compromise which is Exhibit C in this case. By the compromise the daughter-in-law was given considerably less than the one-third which she claimed, and the rest of the property was directed to be divided practically half and half between the 1st defendant and Mandalathipathi. The property was enjoyed jointly by the 1st defendant and Mandalathipathi until 1907, when there was an actual division by metes and bounds between the two people. In 1910 Mandalathipathi mortgaged these and other properties not comprised in the suit to the present 4th defendant, who brought a suit on the mortgage and obtained a decree. The present suit is by the sons of the 1st defendant to set aside inter alia the mortgage in favour of the 4th defendant.

On the last occasion the Subordinate Judge found, without deciding whether the Will was genuine and whether Mailchamy and Mandalathipathi were divided or not, that the compromise was bona fide and should be enforced. We pointed out in our order that the bona fides of the compromise must be determined with reference to the facts whether the Will was genuine and whether Mailchamy and Mandalathipathi were divided. The present Subordinate Judge has returned findings to the effect that the two branches were divided and that the Will was not genuine. He has also found that the compromise is not binding, inasmuch as Mandalathipathi could not have honestly believed in the claim he put forward as being entitled to the property by survivorship. On the first two questions, we are satisfied that his findings are supported by the evidence he has referred to. It is true that the question has to be considered with reference to the state of affairs that existed at the time of the compromise and although Mandalathipathi filed a suit, which he subsequently withdrew, to set aside an alienation by Mailchamy on the ground that the property was undivided, the course of dealing by the two branches of family, their long separate residence and the absence of reliable evidence regarding common enjoyment far outweigh the absence of a regular deed of partition. I am not, therefore, prepared to differ from the Subordinate Judge on this question. As regards the Will, both the first Subordinate Judge and the present Subordinate Judge have agreed in holding that the evidence is insufficient to support its genuineness and I see no reason to differ from them.

At the same time, I must point out that there is no evidence that the 1st defendant, with full knowledge that there was no truth in the claim put forward by the daughter-in-law and Mandalathipathi agreed to the compromise from ulterior motives. There is not sufficient evidence to lead us to the conclusion that in assenting to the terms of the compromise she was not acting bona fide in the light of the circumstances then brought to her notice.

I have now to deal with the last of the findings of the Subordinate Judge. It may be, if the question arose between the plaintiffs and Mandalathipathi having regard to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Gunjeshwar Kunwar v. Durga Prashad Singh(1), the plaintiffs would be entitled to a decree, but the question is whether an alienee from a party who had not bona fide believed in the claim put forward by him is in the same position as the party himself. Our attention was drawn by the learned Vakil for the respondents to sections 89 and 96 of the Trusts Act. The former section provides that where any advantage is gained by the exercise of undue influence in derogation of the interests of another, the person gaining such without consideration must hold the advantage for the benefit of the person whose interests have been so prejudiced. Section 95 protects the right of transferees in good faith for consideration from persons who have gained an undue advantage. In my opinion, Mandalathipathi was in the position of a joint trustee within the meaning of section 89 of the Trusts Act. Therefore, the principle enunciated in these two sections is applicable to the present case. It is the principle of equity recognized in the Trusts Act and in other legislative enactments that a purchaser for value without notice of any defect of title in his transferor is entitled to protection, if he obtained the transfer bona fide.

Then it was said that the 1st defendant did not really represent the reversioners in the previous litigation. There is some justification for this contention in the language of the written statement; but having regard to the fact that the object of the statement was to defeat the claim of the person who set up the Will, too much importance should not be attached to the order in which the denials occur. In the written statement two alternative pleas were put forward, the one denying the Will and the other suggesting a jus tertii. Further this question of the 1st defendant not representing the estate was not put forward in the present case in the pleadings. Moreover, before the suit which ended in the compromise was filed and also on the very same day on which the compromise was entered into, and afterwards, the 1st defendant made statements about the property claiming it on behalf of her sons. Vide Exhibits LL and V. Therefore I am of opinion that she must be taken to have entered into the compromise as representing the estate.

The further question is whether the 4th defendant is a bona fide transferee for value without notice of any infirmities in the title of the transferor. On this question there is the evidence that he paid full consideration and that he was not aware of the defect in the title of Mandalathipathi. There is no evidence on the other side that he was aware that Mandalathipathi had practised any fraud upon the 1st defendant and that he had no right to the property which he purported to mortgage. I must, therefore, hold that the 4th defendant is a bona fide transferee for value. The result is that the suit against the 4th defendant must be dismissed with costs, and the decree of the Subordinate Judge will be confirmed in that respect. As regards properties in the possession of the other defendants, having regard to Gunjeshwar Kunwar v. Durga Prashad Singh (1), plaintiff is entitled to recover possession including the properties in the possession of the 3rd defendant, whose rights to maintenance will not be affected by this judgment. The decree, so far as these defendants are concerned, is reversed. Plaintiffs are entitled to their costs against these defendants and must pay the costs of the 4th defendant in this Court.

WALLIS, C. J.—I agree.
